Earl Granville's Speech at the Cobden Club Banquet—The Marquis of Ripon on the Washington Treaty.

LONDON, June 25.—The annual banquet of the Cobden Club was held last evening. The prominent speech of the occasion was made by Earl GRANVILLE, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. In the course of his remarks, Lord GRANVILLE said that if definitive proposals in reference to the French Treaty of Commerce were made to Her Majesty's Government they would be received with the most friendly consideration. Passing to the Treaty of Washington, Earl GRANVILLE said that Mr. COBDEN always desired that America and England should be connected by ties of the warmest character. The speaker then praised the labors of the Marquis of RIPON and Prof. MONTAGU-BERNARD in the High Commission, and spoke of the settlement of the Alabama question as a great and good work, both in its relations to the past and the future, showing how dissensions, which were perhaps the commencement of quarrels, should be settled, leaving behind only friendship, peace and good-will. Earl GRANVILLE, in continuation of his remarks, alluded to the United States as holding a striking protectionist opinion, but declared his belief that the people of that country were fast coming to the conclusion that it is unprofitable to continue the collection of enormous tariffs. The Earl also spoke in high praise of the efforts of the United States to pay off its debt, and in conclusion expressed the hope that the two countries would always be friends. The Marquis of RIPON made a brief speech, in which he maintained that the Treaty of Washington was an equal contract between free neighbors.

THE WASHINGTON TREATY.

The Debate in the House of Lords—Notabilities Present—Earl Russell's Protest—Lord Granville's Reply—Reference to the New Minister—Compliments for America—Good Results of the Discussion.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Tuesday, June 13, 1871.

Last night the Lords gathered a large and distinguished audience for their debate on the American Treaty. The Prince of WALES and his brother, the Duke of EDINBURGH, well bronzed with his recent voyage, sat on the first of the "cross benches," as they are called from running transversely across the House; while the other seats are lateral. These cross benches represent a kind of neutral ground between the Ministerialists and the Opposition. Lord DE GREY, of course, sat with the rest of the Government. In the gallery were Gen. SCHENCK, Sir STAFFORD NORTHCOTE, Prof. MONTAGU BERNARD, Archbishop MANNING, and other well-known public men. There are also a good sprinkling of ladies, who in the Upper House sit with the other "strangers" in an open gallery, full in view of the Peers, and not imprisoned behind bars, as in the Lower House. A great debate in the Lords is always more of a spectacle, and also more effective as an oratorical exhibition, than one in the Commons. The aspect of the Chamber itself is more imposing, with its rich coloring, brilliant stained-glass windows, frescoes on the walls, variegated heraldic paneling and ornaments, the great gilded throne, the ladies in all the rainbow hues of Summer raiment in the gallery. Above the bronze barons of Runnymede look down from their pedestals on the animated scene below, while a strange effect of color is produced by the muster of Bishops in one corner, arrayed in large puffy sleeves of lawn, white as the driven snow, and glossy black silk aprons. The temporal Peers have robes of crimson and ermine, but wear them only on state occasions. With the exception of the Lord Chancellor, who has his long wig and black gown, the spiritual Lords alone appear in their official dress on ordinary days. Not many years since they also sported wigs, little white cauliflower wigs, such as the coachmen of our grandees sometimes wear at a royal levee. Apart from the look of the House, the speaking, when the debate is of any consequence, is kept up to a higher standard than is usual in the House of Commons. One important speaker follows another, without any interval of mediocrity. In the popular assembly, after one or two speeches by the big men, the little men have a turn: but in the Lords, as if by common consent, only men of position and authority take part in the debate, one rising after the other, thus keeping up the clash of the discussion, as it were, and the ring of contending sword and shield. Moreover, the House of Commons is degenerating into a very slovenly, sloppy fashion of discussion, and oratory is almost dying out, only a very few members, such as Mr. GLADSTONE, Mr. DISRAELI, Mr. BRIGHT, Mr. HORSMAN, Mr. LOWE and Mr. STANSFELD, have any pretensions to be considered orators, in any proper sense of the term. For one good speaker in the Commons, there are two or three in the Lords. But in one respect the latter are at a terrible disadvantage, and that is as regards the hall in which they meet. It is grand and gorgeous, but the worst place in the world to speak in. Everything is sacrificed to the eye. The sound is caught up and echoed about, for want of proper acoustic arrangements.

LORD RUSSELL'S RESOLUTION.

Last evening, for example, Lord RUSSELL, who can speak out well enough when he chooses, but who usually drawls away in an undertone, was often inaudible. It required very close attention to follow him, and even with the closest attention it was impossible to catch all he said. At intervals he showed some flashes of his old spirit, reminding one of MOORE'S description of him:

——"when the steam was on,
And languid Johnny rose to glorious John."

The resolution he proposed embodied a protest against the retrospective action of the rules as to neutrals set forth in the treaty. It was unjust, he held, that England's conduct in 1862 should be tried by laws not imposed till 1871; but he did not stop here. He argued that the new rules were pushed to a dangerous extent against neutrals, so that if adopted it would always be safer to be a belligerent than a neutral. According to his interpretation, "a merchant in London might send out a merchant vessel to any port of another country, and because he might secretly have the intention of using her for purposes of war against the friends of Her Majesty, this country might be made liable for all the damage she might do." The burden of his speech was that the treaty was nothing for England but humiliation and disaster, "all concession on our side; all assertion, without even argument, on the other." England had "paid a tribute in order to buy peace; this was the course taken by the Greek Emperor to conciliate the Turkish Sultan; but Mr. GIBBON (this Mr. GIBBON is highly characteristic of his Lordship, who would speak of Mr. SHAKESPEARE or Mr. MILTON, and always pronounces in the fashion of the last century, as, for instance, 'obleege' for 'oblige,') has pointed out the error of that policy and how the hostility of Turkey was only inflamed by the annual tribute." And then he went into a dismal jeremiad over England's decline and fall in the following strain:

"I have heard quite lately that the merchants of New-York respect this country when it shows any spirit of resistance, any of that old British spirit which used to exist here, and they are far from admiring the concessions which have been made. You will not, therefore, get friends in this way. There is one thing which presses upon my mind very strongly. The late Mr. HENRY DRUMMOND, a man of original mind, once said there was a word that used to govern all the world two centuries ago, and that word was credo, but that there was another word that now governed the whole world, and that word was 'credit.' Two centuries ago we maintained our credo; we maintained our Protestant faith; in the time of JAMES II. we maintained it triumphantly. The destruction of the Spanish Armada and the battle of the Boyne confirmed our power, and the country has been triumphant in its credo. But now we come to credit, and we are told, 'What does it matter about British honor? What does it matter about national character? The funds are high, the American bonds are high; the railway shares have improved one and a half per cent. since the treaty has been signed, and that will carry all the world before it.' The noble Lord on the woolsack said he had very little opinion of keeping up the prestige of this country, and I once made a similar declaration in the House of Commons. I said, provided the honor, the character and the reputation of this country were maintained, I cared very little what became of the prestige of the country. That is my sentiment still. I have seen a letter today stating that this treaty has lowered the reputation of England more than anything that has been done this century. I am very much of the same opinion."

The real gist of the speech was, however, a personal vindication. He was evidently very sore that he had been thrown over, and that it had been made a question for arbitration whether or not the Government, of which he was Foreign Secretary, had been guilty of neglect in 1861-2. He insisted that Mr. FISH imputed intentional neglect to him and others. "That was Mr. FISH'S charge," he exclaimed, and it seems to have been so pleasant to the English Commissioners that they were delighted to meet him, and seem to have sworn eternal friendship with him. This was really the cue to the whole speech, the source of all his tears and groans. He could not endure the idea that the English Commissioners should have hob-nobbed with any one guilty of the atrocity of having questioned his official conduct. Incidentally Lord RUSSELL mentioned an interesting little biographical detail. He submitted his foreign dispatches to Lord PALMERSTON, who sometimes wrote the whole dispatch over again.

LORD GRANVILLE'S REPLY.

Lord GRANVILLE is the blandest and most genial of Ministers; and all his blandness and geniality were employed on this occasion to soothe Lord RUSSELL'S ruffled susceptibilities and to remove all asperities from the debate. He admitted that Lord RUSSELL, when in office, had shown an earnest desire to enforce and even go beyond the law in the fulfillment of our neutral obligations. He cited, however, Sir R. PALMER'S authority for saying that the new rules as to neutrals did not conflict with anything that was done under Lord PALMERSTON'S Government, and argued that the concessions made were fully repaid, not only by the removal of a vexatious dispute with the United States, but by the establishment of certain rules of international law which England had more interest in obtaining than any other country. He described the course of events which led to the Commission, the information from all quarters that reached him as to the public feeling of America on the subject, the strong irritation at the injury done to their mercantile marine, and the absence of any expression of friendly regret on England's part; the report of "a gentleman of great knowledge of things and men both in the United States and the Dominion," (I suppose he here alluded to Sir J. ROSE,) that "anything in the shape of a tribute to the national importance of the country, such as an Embassy or a Commission, might be attended with favorable results;" the proposal of a Commission by the English Government to consider the fisheries question, and the proposal the United States that the Alabama question should be added, and finally the rejoinder that the reference should include the mode of settling all other claims arising out of the rebellion. This last point was, he explained "a somewhat one-sided one in our favor, because there are hardly any claims remaining unsettled on the part of the Americans; but there is a very large mass of claims on the part of British subjects, some of a large and others of a very small and troublesome character." He also spoke in the highest terms of the fairness and conciliatory disposition shown on the American side, both in arranging for the Commission, and afterward when the Commission met, and denied that all the concessions had been on England's side. He regretted that the Fenian raids had not been included in the treaty, but there were political reasons why the American Government could not agree to that, and in his opinion it was not worth while to sacrifice the whole treaty solely on this account. Lord RUSSELL'S suggestion that England has, by this treaty, exposed herself to a claim which it would be difficult to resist from Prussia with regard to the export of arms, would, he said, be mischievous, if it were not so utterly illogical.

"In the one case," he retorted, "we propose to settle demands which we admit, and to make arrangements for the future which we think will be advantageous; in the other case we should have to accede to demands which not only do we not admit, but the admission of which the highest authorities think would involve the abandonment of one of the most useful rights this country has. I never said to Count BERNSTORFF 'I am doing my best to stop this, if only I can get evidence;' I never said I would make an attempt, even if it should be futile in the result; but I said, 'This thing I will not do; it is not my intention to do;' and I justified what I said by arguments based on the law and the practice of the country. I certainly did not say, as my noble friend said, wrote, and spoke, that our law on the subject of the export of arms was a scandal."

REFERENCE TO MINISTER SCHENCK.

After thanking the Commissioners on both sides for the admirable manner in which they had performed their task, he concluded by a general reference to Gen. SCHENCK:

"And if I may add one word in the hearing of one who may possibly be now present within these walls—of one who acted a distinguished part, and who, by his own influence and the influence of his countrymen, contributed largely to the happy conclusion of the labors of the Commission—one who has lately arrived among us eminently on a mission of peace, I should like to be able to say, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and I may add, of the country at large, that we do feel grateful to him and to the American Government for the disposition they have shown in this matter. I trust, as the debate goes on, and as he hears men of eminence speaking on both sides, he will observe that in this House we can take large, comprehensive, and non-party views of questions where great national and colonial interests are involved, and that it is not the desire of parties, unless supported by a very general feeling, to interpose embarrassment and difficulty when these can be avoided."

THE CONSERVATIVES ON THE TREATY.

It was seen from the first that Lord RUSSELL could hardly hope to carry his resolution; but it was not certain how far the Conservatives would support him. At a meeting on Saturday they decided to wash their hands both of his resolution and of the treaty. Lord DERBY was their mouth-piece in announcing this decision. As to the resolution, he pointed out that it was no use carrying it in that House, when it was certain to be rejected in the other House, where the Government had a majority. The treaty must now be regarded as practically concluded, and he threw the whole responsibility on the Ministry, merely expressing his opinion that it was unsatisfactory, and discreditable to English diplomacy.

"It was clear," he said, "that the Americans declined to play the game unless they were tolerably sure beforehand that they would win and the dice were loaded, so that by no possibility could the result have been in our favor. It would have been well had the lamb-like temper of our Commissioners been qualified by some admixture of the shrewd firmness and determination of the Americans. He was rather skeptical of the general feeling of irritation supposed to exist in the States, because the Americans were a reasonable people, and there was not much ground for resentment or irritation left. There had always been in the United States an anti-English party, and if the policy adopted of considering it necessary to consult American feeling by granting anything and everything they asked was to be the rule of the future, he did not think we were very likely to see the end of that party, since the success of their policy would be an encouragement to them to continue it—at least they must be very foolish not to take that view."

Lord CARNARVON also thought the treaty a very poor bargain from the Imperial point of view, and unfair to the Canadians. Lord CAIRNS, refusing to interfere with the prerogative of the Crown in the matter, showed his legal skill in minute criticisms of the new bill as to rental obligations. One of his chief points, however, as to contraband, was answered by anticipation in the House of Commons earlier in the evening. He complained especially of the vagueness of the words "due diligence."

COMPLIMENTS FOR AMERICA.

Lord SALISBURY availed himself of the opportunity (as the Duke of ARGYLL afterward remarked) to say something amiable about America, and also about the Government.

"All," he said, "we have got by the treaty is simply the advantage of cooling the susceptibilities of the American people. I remember a passage in a distinguished essayist in which he dwells on the advantages enjoyed in the family circle by persons who had the reputation of having bad tempers; everything is sacrificed to them for the sake of keeping peace at home. This is the view which the Government appear to take of the American people. The sole advantage hoped for from the treaty is the calming of the feelings of this great and magnanimous nation, whom we persist in treating as a spoilt child in the nursery of nations. The advantage suggested by my noble friend on the woolsack, seems to me most problematical. He says that the American people have been persistently urging this doctrine upon us for the last few years, and if we accept it now we shall have the enormous advantage that they will act upon it in case of a war in the future. But I suppose, if they were urging it upon us, they would have the consistency to observe it, whatever complications might arise. The noble Lord, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, shakes his head, and I dare say he knows the American people better than I do; but no honorable and upright people would act otherwise than as I have suggested. In order to gain this end, you have sacrificed the rights of neutral nations. One great disadvantage in which you put them for the future, is that there is no longer any such certain thing as international law, because you have established it as a precedent, a neutral nation is responsible for not obeying a rule which did not exist at the time an act complained of was committed."

DEFENSE OF THE TREATY.

The defense of the treaty was undertaken by Lord DE GREY and Lord KIMBERLY, (Colonial Secretary,) and the Duke of ARGYLL, but they added little to what had been said by the Foreign Secretary. On the whole, the debate has done good, I think. It has let out a great deal of irritability and grumbling, which will be a relief to those who were suffering from it; and on the other hand, it has given the Government an opportunity of vindicating very satisfactorily the course they have pursued. The speeches of Lord RUSSELL, Lord SALISBURY and other Peers, deploring the humiliation of England, should be pleasant, soothing reading for Mr. SUMNER and Gen. BUTLER. We shall have, as Lord CAIRNS promised, a good deal more talk about the treaty before we are done with it, but its general expediency is ratified by the common sense and good feeling of the English public, as well as of the American.

THE FISHERIES QUESTION.

The debate branched into two divisions—one as to the Alabama question, and the other as to the Fisheries question, and I will add a few lines to give an idea of the views expressed on the latter. Lord RUSLELL and Lord CARNARVON evidently hankered after a revival of the old reciprocity arrangement, and regretted that the question had not been used as a kind of battering-ram against England's protective system. To this Lord GRANVILLE replied that he doubted the force of the instrument for that purpose, and further that it would be unwise and undignified in a great State like the Dominion to go on "haggling" at such a question. It would be much better to leave free trade in the United States to take its natural course. On this point Lord DE GREY also said:

"I entertain no doubt that the surest mode of retarding the progress of free trade in America is to persuade the people of that country that to exact free trade would be to give an advantage to England or to British colonies, instead of being, as it would be, a benefit and an advantage to the United States. Free trade principles are making considerable progress in America, and there can be no doubt that in the course of a few years you will have free trade measures passed first as to coal and salt, and then as to lumber, probably, if you do not arm the Protectionist Party in the country by enabling them to say, 'This is British free trade.'"

WASHINGTON.

The Internal Revenue Bureau and the Central Railroad Tax.

More to be Known as to the Proposition to Divulge the Commissioner's Decision—The Census—Superintendent Walker, of the Printing Bureau—Vice-President Colfax—The New Cancer Remedy—Miscellaneous.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The air is full of statements and counter-statements and explanations of those who profess to give one side or other about the Internal Revenue Office trouble. The real facts in the case have not yet been published, but they may be expected in a few days, as well as a result of a good deal of importance which the facts will produce. The relations which have existed between Secretary BOUTWELL and Commissioner PLEASONTON, personally and officially, which are no better known today than they have been for months gone by, are brought up, and purposely, to all appearance, to deprive the question at issue of its real importance, and make it seem a personal quarrel between the head of a department and his subordinate. Mr. BOUTWELL is very reticent, and has not told his griefs, if he has them, to anybody. One side of the story is told by those who are earnest supporters of Gen. PLEASONTON, and the other side by those who appear to oppose him rather than to take up the glove for Secretary BOUTWELL. This would seem to indicate that the commotion was confined to the Internal Revenue Office, and that in the conflict, if there is one, Secretary BOUTHWELL is the master of the situation. This is porobably true; but still if a change in the administration of the Revenue Bureau should take place, the history of its causes will show that it was not Mr. BOUTWELL who compelled it. The denial of the Railroad Company that advance news was received by it, which was sent from here Friday night, accords with what was said in these dispatches the day before, that the transaction, whatever it was, was probably a private speculation only. The attorney who was engaged in it, however, professed to act for the road. That there was a proposition discussed, not to put it stronger, touching the disclosure of the decision of the tax case in advance of its official promulgation, has not been denied. It is due to Col. THOMSON to say that he claims to be able to show that he was acting in the matter as Government Detective and in the interest of the Department.

PRINTING THE CENSUS.

The Government Printing-office will soon have about thirty type-setters at work on the census reports, and a large mass of manuscript tables are already in hand. All of the volumes will be going forward together, and the work in the Census Office is in such a condition that copy can be furnished the printer as fast as it can be used. The first, or large population volume, which contains the statistics of most interest to the people, will be ready to issue almost immediately after the return of Gen. WALKER from Europe, and the other volumes only a little later. There will be very little delay in the issue of all the reports, other than the time needed for the mechanical labor involved in printing.

HEALTH OF GEN. WALKER.

Gen. FRANCIS A. WALKER, the Superintendent of the Census, is confined to his bed by an attack of disease induced by overwork and a severe cold. His physician promises a quick recovery, and expects he will be well enough by Tuesday night next to go to New-York, whence he will sail for England, next day, in company with SAMU. BOWLES, editor of the Springfield Republican. Gen. WALKER has found the duties of his office wearing on his health, and his arrangements for the voyage have been made for some time. He expects to be absent from this country about seven weeks, and will spend the time he is away in England and Scotland. He does not go on official business, but for rest and recreation, which he has abundantly earned.

PERSONAL.

Senator BLAIR leaves to-morrow for St. Louis, whither he is going to bring his family East to spend the Summer. Secretary BELKNAP has gone to Princeton, where he will deliver, next Tuesday, the annual address before the American Whig and Cliosophic Societies. He will return next Thursday.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

CHARLES C. BEAMAN, Jr., of New-York, has recently been employed by the Department of State to arrange the voluminous papers now on file in relation to the Alabama claims for presentation to the tribunal of arbitration under the Treaty of Washington. Pending the session of the Joint High Commission this gentleman published a volume entitled The National and Private Alabama Claims, and their final and amicable settlement, in which he gave, from the records of the Department of State, a list of seventy vessels captured by the Alabama, thirty-six by the Florida and nine by the Georgia, thirty-six by the Shenandoah, thirty-four by their tenders, eighteen by the Sumter, twenty-nine by the Tallahassee and two by the Nashville. Tables giving the claims filed by United States citizens for the losses of these vessels and their cargoes by the four vessels first named amount to $12,830,000. The claims for losses by other vessels and other claims that have not yet been filed will probably bring the gross amount claimed for the property destroyed to at least $13,000,000.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT.

A letter just received from Vice-President COLFAX, dated South Bend, says the doctors allow him to write two or three letters a day instead of twenty or thirty. He adds:

"I am living here the laziest life possible, and, looking back at the last dozen years, I wonder now that the blow did not fall earlier. Every biennial Congressional canvass I made from seventy to one hundred and ten speeches, and the interim between them was filled with public life with all its exacting duties, lecturing, &c. My journeys across the continent and to the Rocky Mountains, the only relaxation of the last half dozen years, postponed the evil day for me. I am going to follow your counsel and that of other friends hereafter, so that I can enjoy, with my family, the health that Providence is so kindly giving back to me."

GEN. SHERMAN'S TOUR.

Gen. SHERMAN mentions, in conversation with friends, that everywhere he went on his recent tour of inspection he met with warm receptions from the people, especially in Louisiana and Texas. The Governors of those States informed him that the peace and order therein would favorably contrast with any period previous to the late war. He found the army in good condition, and speaks in praise of the officers.

THE CANCER CURE.

The State Department has received large numbers of letters from parties in different parts of the country, asking to be supplied with some of the cunderango, the recently discovered cancer remedy brought to the attention of the Government by the Ecuadorian Minister. These applicants are answered by a circular as follows:

SIR: In compliance with your wishes, I inclose a copy of the correspondence which has passed between this Department, the Minister of Ecuador, accredited to the United States, and the Minister of the United States at Quito, relative to the discovery of the vegetable called cunderango. The limited supply of the vegetable with which this Department was furnished has been exhausted.

SOUTH AMERICA.

The Emancipation Question in Brazil.

RIO JANEIRO, June 6, via LISBON, June 25.—In the Brazilian Chambers a vote has been taken upon the clause of the speech from the throne relative to the emancipation of the slaves belonging to the Crown, and resulted in a majority of 28 for the Government. The debate upon the Emancipation bill itself has not yet commenced.

THE WEST INDIES.

Gloom in Hayti—Cabral's Defeat in San Domingo—A Haytian General Among the Prisoners.

KINGSTON, Jam., June 25.—The Rising Star carried the passengers and mails of the Tagus to Aspinwall.

HAYTI, June 17.—Affairs are gloomy here. Congress is at variance with the Ministry, especially on finance.

SAN DOMINGO, June 15.—CABRAL'S defeat is confirmed. He had Haytian soldiers and BAEZ had colored Americans. The Haytian General is a prisoner.

PIUS NINTH.

Celebration of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Pontificate.

CINCINNATI, June 25.—The Catholics of Cincinnati and vicinity celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of PIUS the Ninth's Pontificate today, principally with a grand procession in the afternoon. The churches were generally decorated with evergreens, and the American and Papal flags were displayed from the summit of the steeple of the Holy Trinity, where a cross of gas jets was displayed last night and to-night, discernible for miles in all directions. The procession was the largest ever witnessed in Cincinnati, and occupied two hours and twenty minutes in passing a given point. About 20,000 persons participated. Covington, Newport, Ludlow and Dayton, Ky., united in an independent celebration, having a procession about two miles long.

ST. LOUIS, June 25.—The Catholic demonstration this afternoon in honor of the twenty-fifth anniversary of PIUS IX.'s pontificate was the largest and most imposing religious procession that ever took place here. There were about 15,000 people in the procession, which was one hour and forty minutes in passing a given point. The decorations were very profuse, and bands of music abundant.

THE PACIFIC SLOPE.

Defiance of the Amador Miners—The Gubernatorial Campaign in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 25.—A consultation between Gov. HAIGHT and the riotous miners of Amador County, last night, resulted in no arrangement of the difficulties—the miners being defiant, and determined to prevent all work. The Governor telegraphed to Sacramento for troops to march to Amador this morning. It is believed, however, that the miners will disperse when the troops arrive, and that there will be no bloodshed.... Mayor SELBY secured the entire San Francisco delegation to the Republican State Convention in the primaries yesterday, and the contest for the nomination of Governor is now likely to be very close between him and NEWTON BOOTH, of Sacramento.

Barometer corrected for elevation and temperature.

Synopsis and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, June 26—1 A. M.—The low barometer existing Saturday evening north and east of Virginia has been today succeeded by a steady rise. A tendency to fall is now noticed in northern New-York. The pressure has risen in the Southern and Gulf States, and to a less extent on the upper lakes. A small area of low barometer has today passed from Missouri to Indiana, without serious disturbance. The temperature has fallen on the Mid-Atlantic, and is elsewhere sensibly stationary. Light northerly winds in the Middle and Eastern States are now succeeded by calms and light south-westerly winds. Light winds have prevailed at all of the stations east of the Rocky Mountains during Sunday. Clear and cloudy weather is now reported from all points east of the Rocky Mountains. Western and north-western reports are not yet received.

PROBABILITIES.

Clear and partially cloudy weather, with fresh south-west winds, will probably prevail on Monday very generally on the Atlantic coast and lower lakes. Light winds are probable for the upper lakes and Gulf coast.

The Illinois Warehouse Bill—Action of the Chicago Warehouse Men.

CHICAGO, Ill., June 25.—The Warehouse bill, passed by the Illinois Legislature, takes effect the 1st of July. The warehouse men of this city held a meeting a few days ago, the proceedings of which have not been made public; but it is understood the following are the leading points of the agreement entered into: Warehouse men will reduce their charges for storage of sound grain to the following rates: Two cents per bushel for the first twenty days or parts thereof; half a cent per bushel for each succeeding ten days or part thereof. The tariff fixed in the Warehouse bill is two cents for the first thirty days, and half a cent for each subsequent fifteen days. This decision denotes that they will not take out license under the law, but will do the business as private warehouse men, receiving grain only from those who may request them in writing to do so, at the above rates of storage. It is understood that they have legal advice that the bill recently passed by the Legislature is unconstitutional, and that several of its provisions cannot be enforced.

THE CROPS.

Grass and Cotton in the South—Heavy Rains General.

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 25.—The newspapers publish extracts with reference to the growing crops from letters received by one of the factorage houses.

GAINESVILLE, Fla., June 20.—There has been a very wet spell here lately, and there is now any quantity of grass. The cotton crop is not so good as last year, neither in stand nor size. The rainy season is certainly upon us, and it depends very much on the time it lasts whether we will make an average crop. It is considered that we are a good deal behind last year.

CAMDEN, S. C., June 21.—We have had enough rain to make three crops, and I am sure that if it has fallen everywhere as it has here upon our swamps, there must be a falling off in the crops.

The Growing Crops in the West.

CHICAGO, June 25.—Reports from Eastern and Central Wisconsin, Eastern and Central Iowa, Northern and Central Indiana, and all parts of Illinois, indicate that the recent thunder-storm and hurricane had no perceptible ill effects upon the growing crops. Many of the dispatches say the crop prospects were never better. In a few localities the wheat crop is suffering from rust. Reports from Western Wisconsin and the great wheat belt in Minnesota do not give so favorable a view. The St. Paul Press says, a recent trip over the section bordering the Mississippi River showed that the reported ill condition of the wheat crop was fully justified. The accounts from Minnesota justify the belief that the disaster has been general, and that the yield will be far below the average.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 25.—The new wheat crop is two weeks behind the usual time, and that received thus far is of inferior quality.

AN AWFUL TRAGEDY.

A School-Teacher Shot Dead Among her Scholars by a Rejected Suitor—Attempted Suicide of the Murderer.

A letter from Lagrange, Ind., under date of June 23, to the Cincinnati Commercial, gives the following account of the cold-blooded murder of a young school-teacher in Lagrange County, Indiana:

MISS ANNA DWIGHT, a school-mistress, was murdered, yesterday, at Stone Lake School-house, about ten miles from here, in Van Buren Township, by a young man named CHAUNCEY BARNES, of Elkhart County. BARNES left his father's house yesterday morning, walked to White Pigeon, four miles distant, hired a horse and buggy there, and taking with him a woman whose name and character are not yet known, went to the school-house where Miss DWIGHT was teaching. Miss DWIGHT was at the time enjoying the noon recreation with the school-children on the margin of the lake near by, when BARNES and the woman drove up. The woman called Miss DWIGHT to the buggy side, when BARNES alighted and asked her to walk with him, as he wished to speak to her privately. She consented, and they went a short distance, and sat down on a log and conversed a few minutes, when BARNES was seen to rise, draw a revolver from his pocket, and fire two shots at her. She fell at the first fire. He then presented the pistol at his own head, and fired several times. Two children ran frightened to a neighbor near by, who ran immediately to the spot, found Miss DWIGHT dead, and the young man reloading his pistol. He and the woman were promptly placed in custody, and Surgeon ELLIOTT, of White Pigeon, sent for. The doctor reports four wounds in BARNES' head, two of which entered the brain, and that this would eventually prove fatal.

An examination of the parties was had before Justice GALLOWAY, the young man committed to jail, and the woman held to bail in the sum of $1,000—CHAS. DWIGHT, the father of the murdered girl, going her bail. The young man was brought to jail last night, and is this morning resting tolerably comfortable. The physicians here are not so certain as to the seriousness of his wounds.

Great excitement prevails in the vicinity of the homicide. The neighbors are prepared to finish the work the young man attempted on himself, but Mr. DWIGHT protested against it, and a better judgment prevailed. There is some comment on the fact of the father of the murdered girl bailing the woman. The only supposed cause of the murder is the rejection of BARNES as a suitor, a short time ago, and the acceptance by Miss DWIGHT of the attentions of another person. The pistol used was a small six-shooter. BARNES has been clerking in a grocery store, at White Pigeon, Mich., lately, and had borne a good character. His father is a farmer in Elkhart County, Indiana.

New Pastors in City Churches.

Rev. Dr. HARPER, who for many years past has had charge of the United Presbyterian Church, on Seventh-avenue, has accepted a professorship in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary, at Newburg, and his congregation have elected Rev. SAMUEL H. GRAHAM, of Burgett's Town, Penn., as his successor. The latter gentleman preached at the Seventh-avenue Church, yesterday morning and afternoon, for the first time. In the afternoon he took for his text, the ninth chapter of Luke, from the twenty-eighth to the thirtieth verse. The subject was the appearance of Moses and Elias at the transfiguration of Christ, Mr. GRAHAM holding that this was sufficient evidence of the fallacy of that dogma that would condemn to everlasting punishment all the sinless men that had dwelt on the earth prior to the advent of the Messiah; as Christ would not have called spirits from any other place than heaven to consult with Him. The members of the congregation express themselves as remarkably well satisfied with their new pastor.

Rev. W. W. NEWELL, Jr., pastor elect of the Fourteenth-street Presbyterian Church, preached both morning and evening yesterday. In the morning he preached an earnest sermon from the text, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." This is the first sermon of Rev. Mr. NEWELL before his present congregation, to whom he seemed to give general satisfaction. For some years past he ministered successfully in one of the North River towns, and has been recently selected as pastor of his present charge. The church is centrally located on Fourteenth-street, between Seventh and Eighth avenues, and was yesterday filled by a large and attentive congregation.

Rev. GODLOE B. BELL, formerly of Ramapoo, N. Y., was last evening installed pastor of the Seventh Presbyterian Church, corner of Broome and

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A MEMOIR OF CHARLES MAYNE YOUNG, TRAGEDIAN. With extracts from his son's journal. By JULIAN CHARLES YOUNG, A. M., Rector of Hinlington. With portraits and sketches. London and New-York: MACMILLAN & CO. 1871.

The memoirs of noted actors are almost sure to be interesting. What with the wide circle of their experience, their habits of travel, and the magnetism that is apt to bring them in contact with the more brilliant and remarkable persons and things of their time, the biographies of comedians are usually conspicuous for spirit and variety. The memoir before us is no exception to this rule. It is full of interest from beginning to end. It tells some curious stories, which, so far as we know, are now seen in print for the first time. Some of these, to be sure, seem a little puerile, but we must remember that in a biography the trifling things have value as well as the great ones, and the bright, wholesome, tolerant and truly Christian spirit in which Rev. JULIAN YOUNG invariably writes, gives to all his pages a refreshing charm.

CHARLES YOUNG was one of the actors of a past generation, who flourished before the privileges of the great patent theatres had been abrogated, and to whom was conceded a social position not always so freely acknowledged afterward. Mr. YOUNG undoubtedly had peculiar claims to such distinction. His father was a professional man, a London surgeon of considerable eminence. His aunt's husband, Prof. MULLER, was distinguished for scientific attainments, and was the body physician and confidential adviser of the King of Denmark. Through this connection CHARLES YOUNG was brought into the affectionate notice of that sovereign and his Queen at a very tender age. Having accompanied Dr. MULLER to Copenhagen, the good looks, amiable spirit and sweet disposition of CHARLES attracted the attention of the royal family, and he soon became a favorite at the palace. The King, in fact, became so fond of him that he used to have the child brought to him the first thing every morning while he was dressing, made him his frequent companion in walking, and, except when engaged in public duties, rarely allowed him to be out of his sight. Indeed, it was the King's earnest wish that his young favorite should be naturalized as a Danish subject, and pass his life in that country. The parents of CHARLES would not, however, consent to a permanent separation, and he left Denmark, at the age of ten, in 1787, with many gifts and autograph letters of advice and affection from the royal family. Correspondence was maintained for years afterward, and, when CHARLES went upon the stage, his illustrious patrons never missed an opportunity of seeing him act or of encouraging and paying him attention.

Honors like these, although highly valued in his country and day, were, happily, by no means YOUNG's sole title to respect and consideration. Educated at Eton and other recognized schools of learning, he became a man of uncommon accomplishments; he added to a large share of personal beauty and a singularly melodious and resonant voice, unmistakable histrionic genius; and more important than all this, amid all the trials and temptations of a critical and arduous profession, he retained through a long life exemplary habits and an entirely unblemished reputation. Like CHARLES KEAN, YOUNG was led to go on the stage by pecuniary need, his mother having been ill-treated by his father, and being early dependent on her son for support. His first appearance was made at Liverpool in the character of Douglas in HOME's tragedy of that name, in 1798. YOUNG then acted under the name of Green. His success was so decided that he was offered and accepted a leading position at the Manchester Theatre for the season of 1799. Soon after he played in Glasgow and Edinburgh. In the latter city he made the acquaintance of Sir WALTER SCOTT, and the two remained firm friends ever after. In 1805, YOUNG married a lovely girl, a Miss GRIMANI, who had just previously made quite a sensation as an actress. She played Juliet at the London Haymarket in 1804, and the prints and critics of the day speak of her with rapturous approval. YOUNG and his wife were tenderly attached, but their wedded bliss was short; she died July 17, 1806, of puerperal fever, after giving birth to an only child, JULIAN, the author of the memoirs before us. The first appearance of YOUNG in London was at the Haymarket, June 22, 1807, as Hamlet. His success was undeniable, and was soon generally acknowledged. An incident that occurred on the occasion of his debut, however, clouded its triumph. The applause was hearty and continuous, but it was invariably accompanied by a single, sharp, sustained, and malignant hiss. The actor detected in the utterer his own father—the father, as JULIAN YOUNG writes, "whose cruelty had exposed him to the risk of the indignity." The curious incident of the assault committed by the elder YOUNG upon his son GEORGE in a stage-coach, and which was witnessed and recorded by CRABBE ROBINSON, is cited in the pages in hand in these words: "I spent a couple of hours with Mr. GEORGE YOUNG. I took courage to relate to him an anecdote about himself. Nearly forty years ago, I happened to be in a hackney-coach with YOUNG. A stranger came in. It was opposite Lackington's. On a sudden the stranger struck YOUNG a violent blow in the face. YOUNG coolly put his head out of the window and told the coachman to let him out. Not a word passed between YOUNG and the stranger. But the former having alighted, said in a calm voice before he shut the door: 'Ladies and gentlemen, that is my father.' YOUNG recollected the incident perfectly, but not that I was present."

On the night of May 31, 1832, CHARLES YOUNG bade farewell to the stage, his last appearance, like his first, being in the character of Hamlet. The tragedian was at this time but fifty-three years of age, and he had been before the public scarcely more than half the period that other famous actors have continued to appeal for popular support. His reasons for retiring were frankly stated on the night of farewell. He did not care to "lag superfluous on the stage." Having amassed a handsome fortune, and compassed, as he thought, the artistic limit of his powers, he thought it wise to withdraw in time, and inclination seconded the resolution of prudence. He sustained during his career the usual Shakespearean range, adding to it some parts like Beverley, The Stranger, Zanga, &c., but having no original part written for him until Miss MITFORD produced "Rienzi," in 1828. He made a great success in Sir Pertinax MacSycophant, in 1824, and in Roman characters surpassed all the actors of his time, with the exception of KEMBLE. He was one of the first of the tragedians to receive £50 a night—offered him at Drury Lane on his leaving Covent Garden—and, after playing Iago to KEAN's Othello under that contract, YOUNG gained a unique distinction. The agreement was, that after the opening representation, the actors were to alternate the parts, but after the first performance KEAN refused to give up Othello to YOUNG. KEAN declared he would stand an action at law rather than concede the point. He said he had been completely deceived in YOUNG, whom he had never seen act, and that YOUNG was a far greater artist than he (KEAN) had been informed he was. "I flatter myself that he could not act Othello as I do," exclaimed KEAN, "but what chance should I have in Iago after him, with his personal advantages and his d—d musical voice?" KEAN refused to alternate the parts in "Venice Preserved" for the same reason, and YOUNG good-naturedly assented to the omission. The splendid dramatic constellation that shone in London, fifty years ago, was certainly greatly increased in brilliancy by the star of CHARLES YOUNG. Such a combination, for example, as was presented when SHIEL's "Apostate" was brought out, must be ever memorable in the annals of the stage. In this play appeared MACREADY, CHARLES YOUNG, C. KEMBLE and, Miss O'NEILL, and there was a like union of talents in "Evadne" and other dramas. Rev. JULIAN YOUNG deals with his father's histrionic pretensions with modesty and candor, and intersperses his chronicle with many acute observations on the theatre and its professors. Perhaps the best isolated passage on the theme of relative merit is a comparison between CHARLES YOUNG and EDMUND KEAN, and which consequently we quote:

"My impression as to the comparative powers of KEAN and YOUNG may fairly enough be regarded with suspicion. My judgment will be supposed to be biased by filial partiality. But I never was a blind admirer of my father's theatrical talent. It is, therefore, in no narrow spirit of partisanship, but under deliberate and impartial conviction that I shall try to distinguish between them, and award to each his due. Each had certain physical requisites which especially qualified him for his vocation. YOUNG had a small, keen, brown, penetrating eye, overshadowed by a strongly-defined and bushy eyebrow. KEAN's eye was infinitely finer; it was fuller, blacker, and more intense. When kindled by real passion off the stage, or by simulated passion on, it gleamed with such scorching lustre as literally to make those who stood beneath its rays quail. In this feature, beyond all question, he had an immense superiority over YOUNG. In figure, stature, and deportment, YOUNG had the advantage over KEAN; for he had height, which KEAN had not; and, though YOUNG's limbs were not particularly well-molded, he moved them gracefully; and his head, his throat and bust were classically molded. KEAN in his gait shuffled. YOUNG trod the boards with freedom. YOUNG's countenance was equally well adapted for the expression of pathos or of pride; thus, in such parts as Hamlet, Beverley, The Stranger, Daran, Pierre, Zanga and Cassius, he looked the man he represented. KEAN's variable and expressive countenance, and even the insignificance of his person, rendered him the very type of a Shylock, a Richard, or a Sir Giles Overreach. Even his voice, which was harsh and husky, (except in low and pathetic passages, such as the 'Farewell' in 'Othello,' in which it was very touching,) so far from detracting from its impressiveness, rather added to it. YOUNG's voice, on the other hand, was full bodied, rich, powerful, and capable of every variety of modulation, and, therefore, in declamatory power, he was greatly superior to KEAN, and KEMBLE, too. Beautiful in face and person as KEMBLE was, and great as he was as an actor, his asthma put him at a signal disadvantage with my father in speeches where volume of voice and the rapid delivery of long sentences was needed. The great effects which KEAN produced upon his audience were the spontaneous effusions of real genius. YOUNG's happiest hits were the result of natural sensibility, quickness of apprehension and study. KEAN dazzled his audience by coruscations of fancy, and the vivid light which he shed on passages of which the meaning was obscure. YOUNG hardly ever astonished, but, with the unprejudiced, rarely failed to please. KEAN's acting, as a rule, was unequal, negligent and slipshod. He seemed to be husbanding his powers for a point, or for an outburst of impassioned feeling. YOUNG's conception was good and truthful, and were harmoniously sustained."

The Memoir of Charles Young is followed by extracts from his son's journal, which are not less attractive than the rest of the volume. Mr. YOUNG knew many celebrated people, and his recollections of them are given in a simple, unaffected style, embellished with a keen sense of humor and a ready perception of dramatic effect. Some of his sketches of individuals are very fresh and life-like. Take, for example the following picture of the author of Waverley:

"It was not long before we heard the eager tread of a stamping heel resounding through the corridor, and in another second the door was flung open and in limped SCOTT himself. Although eight-and-forty years have passed away since that memorable morning, the great man's person is as palpably present to me as if then was when in the flesh. His light blue, waggish eye, sheltered, almost screened, by its overhanging pent-house of straw-colored bushy brows, his scant, sandy-colored hair, the Shakespearean height of his upper lip, his towering Pisgah of a forehead, which gave elevation and dignity to a physiognomy otherwise deficient in both; his abrupt movements, the mingled humor, urbanity and benevolence of his smile, all recur to me with startling reality. He was dressed in a green cutaway coat with brass buttons, drab vest trousers and gaiters, with thick shoes on his feet and a sturdy stick in his hand. He looked like a yeoman of the better class; but his manners bespoke the ease, self-possession and courtesy of a high-bred gentleman. Nothing could exceed the winning cordiality of his welcome. After wringing my father's hand, he laid his own gently on my shoulders and asked my Christian name," &c.

Such a portrait as this has a definite and permanent value; and sprinkled through Mr. YOUNG's pleasant pages there are plenty more as graphic and excellent.

The volume is altogether a worthy companion of several others of somewhat similar type that have lately appeared, and assists the journal of CRABBE ROBINSON, the letters of Miss MITFORD, and the biography of WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR in imparting a clear and lively view of the celebrities, literary and other, of the last generation. It is well worth reading and preserving for this general merit, apart from the particular and important one of preserving a record of the life of one of the worthiest gentlemen who ever shed lustre upon the stage by commanding talents and irreproachable deportment.

THE FALL OF ENGLAND! THE BATTLE OF DORKING. Reminiscences of a Volunteer. New-York: G. P. PUTNAM & SONS.

The present season is unusually prolific in clever political satires. The latest and liveliest is The Battle of Dorking, which first made its appearance in Blackwood's Magazine, and has since been reprinted in a variety of forms. It is evidently intended as a popular campaign document in the interest of the Tory Party, and as such will undoubtedly have a good deal of effect—more in fact than it deserves to have, for, being in the form of a graphic and exciting story, it will be widely read, and will take hold of the popular feelings. The author is supposed to be living some fifty years hence, and to be telling to his grandchildren the story of the invasion of England by the Germans, and the disastrous battle at Dorking which degraded Great Britain from her lofty position among the nations and sorely humbled the pride of her people fostered by so many centuries of greatness. Of the causes and consequences of these disasters the old volunteer, in winding up his story, speaks thus:

"Stripped of our colonies; Canada and the West Indies gone to America; Australia forced to separate; India lost for ever, after the English there had all been destroyed, vainly trying to hold the country when cut off from aid by their countrymen; Gibraltar and Malta ceded to the new naval Power; Ireland independent, and in perpetual anarchy and revolution. When I look upon my country as it is now—its trade gone, its factories silent, its harbors empty, a prey to pauperism and decay—when I see all this, and think what Great Britain was in my youth, I ask myself whether I have really any heart or any sense of patriotism that I should witness such degradation, and still care to live! France was different. There, too, they had to eat the bread of tribulation under the yoke of the conqueror; their fall was hardly more sudden and violent than ours; but war could not take away their rich soil; they had no colonies to lose; their broad lands which made their wealth remained to them; and they rose again from the blow. But our people could not be got to see how artificial our prosperity was—that it rested in foreign trade and financial credit; that the course of trade once turned away from us, even for a time, it might never return; and that our credit once shaken, might never be restored.

* * * After all, the bitterest part of the reflection is that all this misery and decay might have easily been prevented, and that we brought it upon ourselves by our own shortsightedness. There, across the narrow Straits, was the writing on the wall; but we would not choose to read it. The warnings of the few were drowned in the voice of the multitude. Power was then passing from the class which had been used to rule and face political dangers, and which had brought the nation with honor unsullied through former struggles, into the hands of the lower classes, uneducated, untrained to the use of political rights, and swayed by demagogues, and the few who were wise in their generation were denounced as alarmists or aristocrats, who sought their own aggrandizement by wasting public money on bloated armaments." Such language as this, after the vivid description that has been given of the suffering and humiliation which the writer represents as the result of the very policy now in operation under the British Government, is calculated to stir up the pride of Englishmen and set them to thinking whether or not they are in danger of losing their eminence among the nations of the world, and even the wealth which they have been heaping up. However sound or unsound may be the political views in support of which this tract is written, there can be but one opinion concerning its literary merit. Hardly since the time of Dean SWIFT has anything appeared in which imaginary events are portrayed with such startling vividness, and made to appear so real. The description of the battle itself, if it had been an account of a real occurrence in which the writer was himself an active participant, would have been regarded as a remarkable piece of work. As a fanciful representation of what never occurred it is wonderful. The anxiety and excitement at London are depicted with scarcely less power, and the whole piece is evidently the work of an able hand.

SCENES OF WONDER AND CURIOSITY IN CALIFORNIA. A Tourist's Guide to the Yosemite Valley. By J. M. HUTCHINGS. New-York and San Francisco: A. ROMAN & CO.

In view of the fact that the mountain scenery of California, and especially the wonders of the Yosemite Valley, are attracting the attention of tourists and pleasure-seekers, and that whole region is likely to become a place of resort, the present book is very timely and places within the reach of those interested precisely the information which they want. After giving an account of the mammoth trees and the caves, natural bridges and other curiosities of Calaveras County, it devotes several chapters to the Yosemite Valley, and then takes up other places of interest. The descriptions are graphic and interesting, and scattered among them is much information which will be of practical value to travelers. The book is profusely illustrated and elegantly printed.

THE HISTORICAL READER. Embracing Selections from Standard Writers of Ancient and Modern History. By JOHN J. ANDERSON, A. M. New-York: CLARK & MAYNARD.

This volume is made up of selections from historical writers, and has the double value of presenting prominent scenes in history and choice specimens from celebrated authors at the same time. It covers ancient and modern times, and includes the names of nearly all the well-known writers of history. Interspersed among the selections are illustrative passages from English and American poets. Altogether the collection makes an excellent book for reading exercises. Its value is increased by a vocabulary of difficult and unusual words with explanations, a geographical index and a concise account of the authors from whose writings selections are made.

This volume is a translation of the second series of the "Merveilles de la Peinture," by M. VIARDOT. The first series was published some time ago in English, under the title of "Wonders of Italian Art." The present volume embraces notices of the Spanish, German, Flemish, Dutch and French schools, and not only explains the merits and peculiarities of each, but describes many of their most celebrated productions, examining critically into the beauties of individual paintings. The Newport (R. I.) News recently published an article describing the want of enterprise in the South, and has received from Annapolis, Md., a letter saying that "if the party who wrote that paragraph of slander would come South and express himself in the same way, he would, ten to one, feel the effects of a shot from a pistol and a thrust from a bowie-knife."

A third party is favored by the Savannah (Ga.) News, if the Democratic Party is to go on the new departure. It says it is unwilling to accept voluntarily the revolution in our system of government which the Radicals have forced upon us; that it wants the issue plainly and fairly made, and that until the verdict of the people has been obtained, the South should accept nothing.

The Democratic leaders of Ohio find it hard to convince their old-time followers that their new departure is good Democratic doctrine. The Columbus Statesman admits that this portion of the platform is not acceptable to a portion of the party, and it tries to allure them forward, telling them that this is no time for the Democracy—least of all for the old guard of the party—to hang back.

A Democratic paper informs us with great glee, that a man who has been making Republican speeches in the West, has been cast into jail, it having been discovered that he has three wives in Indiana, one in New-York, one in Maryland and an untold number elsewhere. The man ought not to have expected any other fate if he thus talked Republicanism and followed the worst customs of Democrats.

The Savannah (Ga.) Republican now urges that the Southern Democrats should not at present talk about political matters. It counsels a course of "masterly inactivity," and asks, "Why quarrel with the Northern Democracy about abstract theories and party platforms? The Pendleton portion of the Ohio Democracy are endeavoring to make the payment of the national debt in greenbacks the most conspicuous element of the campaign, and the Chicago Tribune expresses the hope that no Republican will place any obstacles in the way of having that issue made as prominent as the Democracy may desire. And it says: "Paying the bonds in greenbacks has had its day. Paying the greenbacks in gold is a much better platform for 1873, and the party which is wise enough to adopt it will have a great advantage before the people."

Hon. JACOB MUELLER was serenaded in Cleveland, Ohio, a few nights ago, and, speaking in German, returned thanks for the ovation, and said that he did not regard his nomination for Lieutenant-Governor by the Republicans as a personal compliment, but as a manifestation of the feelings existing in America toward the great body of Germans who have settled in this country. He said that prior to his return from Europe he had not been much of a party man; but when he saw how earnest the Republicans were to do justice to Germany in the late war, he felt that it was his duty, and the duty of all Germans, to give undivided support to that party.

NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

A Gap in Our National Education.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In regard to the many imperfections which we discover in the different institutions of our land—in their inability to fully effect what should be their purposes—perhaps the imperfections of none are much less noticed, or cared for, than one in our systems of education. State authority, looking merely to the employment of its youth in the pursuit of an education, and involved in the dispensation of justice, the enactment of laws, and the infliction of punishments on the already grown generation, can do but little in establishing the minor or even the main principles on which its children should be drilled. And much less does it seem that they would accomplish their ends, were fixed laws established, whereby there should be a definite amount and kind of instruction imparted to every youth. The parents being absorbed in their daily vocations, though loving and affectionate, it may be, toward their children, neglect, or never once bring to mind, how much of the most important part of their education devolves on themselves. And the teacher, how generally is it the case, having delved and plodded down in the mysteries of a pet topic, and fixed by rote the machinery of his favorite branch, falls into inextricable depths of pedantry, and finally learns how not to sympathize with or encourage his pupils.

Pretending to light the way to knowledge, his clearness does not exceed twilight, which is soon followed by the darkness of midnight. While endeavoring to drill dogmatical principle after dogmatical principle into the understanding of his pupil, he overlooks what should be his true aim and blights the prospects of many a member of the next active generation. Fathers and mothers may send their children to school with the view of having them instructed in some particular branches of education, viz.: Arithmetic, grammar and other rudimentary studies, and also in the higher branches. The teacher may receive them at the hand of the parent and comply with the wishes in instructing in some specified departments. And further, the children thus committed may put forth praiseworthy efforts in accomplishing an allotted amount. But intrusion, education, should not stop here. Man has ethical, moral faculties which should be educated. By moral we mean those faculties which govern or determine the acts of men in regard to right or wrong.

All will agree that those precepts first implanted are the strongest, the most enduring; "that as the twig is bent the tree is inclined," and of what nobler tree can we conceive than the human character? Yet how little do we, as a people, seem to consider this fact. In nearly all cases of crime how easily can it be traced back, away back, to a remote source. That mighty stream of vice, now tumultuously flowing with its wily, maddened waves, may be traced back to a place where merely a mote of some poisonous substance has tumbled into the clearest, most calm waters. In view, then, of all book learning, (commonly so-called,) who is there that considers of little importance the proper formation of character? But how is a good character, a complete education, to be attained? We would say it is not by parents being too remiss with their children, and by entirely overlooking the fact that they have moral as well as intellectual faculties to be educated, and it is not by the teacher, who like a regulator of a mere machine, takes the pupil through certain prescribed rules without holding up to view the grand ends to be accomplished by study. But first the parent should establish a school at home, around the family hearth. The parents should hold on to their own experience, and knowing that a man's worth consists in the amount of good influence he has produced in life, they should teach their children that they are now being prepared to act among men, and that to act well their parts "is where the honor lies." They should hold up before the young minds which Providence has placed under their care noble, elevating ideas, and present to them the grandest aims. Parents should tell their children of the good they can accomplish, and impress on them the importance of qualifying themselves. The responsibility of parents cannot be estimated too highly. The mother now watching over "the cradle of sleeping innocence," should realize "that of such is the kingdom of heaven," and while that child is breathing in all its purity she should make strong resolutions that it shall not, under her care, be misguided and polluted by vice. As it grows in age, she should make it strong against temptation and zealous in doing what is right. Nor should parental duty stop here. It should be extended to the knowing that children are under proper instruction when from their parents.

Secondly, the teacher's office should be not only to implant principles, but to show to what higher aims the principles tend. The teacher should know that his officeds of the most responsible nature in which man is engaged. He should constantly bear in mind that every pupil under his guidance is to affect mankind either for good or evil. He should then impress those minds that they are soon to act on others, and that their success in life will depend on the greatest amount of good they are able to effect. The student, understanding this and believing it, will hold on to the principles of science and art, in order that he may the more skillfully work when he becomes a man and doing for himself. Rather the pupil should be taught that he is continually doing for himself and be brought to realize it. Perhaps some pedagogue who may read this article may be led to proclaim against so great a task.

To such we would say that all men are not adapted to be professional instructors. The office of a public instructor is a high one. It is the father and mother that lay the foundation of our national character, but it is the teacher that should strengthen and remodel it and thereon establish the building of our country's future greatness. The parent and teacher forming our nation's character should see to it that they leave no part uncultivated. As they leave it, it will, in all probability, thus remain. Other people after them may endeavor to affect it, but they cannot essentially alter it. Youths, properly educated, are strong against temptation. They know and feel that it is to the interests of humanity, and to their own interests to act well. Thus strongly guarded they grow in power of good influence.

Education of children, then, should be looked upon as one of the most important duties of each generation. Popular morals may be sought to be corrected and formed at more advanced ages, as the youth has entered manhood, but the aim can only fully be accomplished during the days of childhood. The pulpit may enrich, its tendency may be to elevate those in the proper course, but it can scarcely ever effect a change when the foundation of character is once laid. The minister may beautify and whitewash the fence, but the parent and the teacher are the builders. DOCTOR.

Col. Peter Augustus Porter.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In a recent issue of the TIMES the late PETER B. PORTER, recently deceased at Niagara Falls, is mentioned as a son of the late Gen. PETER B. PORTER, the distinguished soldier of the war of 1812, and in 1823 Secretary of War under President ADAMS. He was not a son of the General, but of his brother, Judge AUGUSTUS PORTER. "Among the earliest of the pioneers in Western New-York were two brothers, AUGUSTUS and PETER B. PORTER, sons of Dr. JOSHUA PORTER, of Salisbury, Conn." (F. S. COZZENS' eulogy before the Century Club on the Life and Services of Col. PETER A. PORTER.) The lustre of military services alone was wanting to the elder brother, but in the narrower sphere of his home—that "Western New-York" of which he had been one of the "pioneers," and among the most energetic and useful, the work of converting it from a wilderness to what it now is, Judge PORTER was scarcely less eminent than his distinguished brother. He died full of years and honors in (I think) 1843—a few years after his younger brother. The excellent and distinguished gentleman recently deceased—the younger son of Judge PORTER—bore the General's name of PETER BUEL, but it would be a wrong to the memory of the only son of Gen. PORTER to forget that he fell on the battle-field of Cold Harbor, an illustrious example of that devotion to duty of which our civil war furnished so many beautiful exemplars. Born to a fortune, educated in the first learned institutions of Europe and America, endowed by nature with beauty of person and brilliancy of intellect, which eminently fitted him for social enjoyment and distinction, surrounded by everything that could make life enviable, he deliberately renounced all these for the service of his country in her hour of need. Before leaving his home, "feeling to its full extent the probability that he might not return from the path of duty on which he had entered," he solemnly recorded, in his "last will and testament," his motives in the following words:

"I can say with truth that I have entered on the course of danger with no ambitious aspirations, nor with the idea that I am fitted by nature or experience to be of any important service to the Government; but in obedience to the call of duty, demanding every citizen to contribute what he could in means, labor or life to sustain the Government of his country—a sacrifice made the more willingly by me when I consider how singularly benefited I have been by the institutions of the land, and that up to this time all the blessings of life have been showered upon me beyond what usually falls to the lot of man."

Soon after he had entered the military service, and while in command of his regiment at Fort McHenry, he was nominated for Secretary of State of New-York. In declining this appointment he gives, besides the original motives which brought him into the field, the following reason: "I left home in command of a regiment composed mainly of the sons of friends and neighbors, committed to my care. I can hardly ask for my discharge while theirs cannot be granted."

He fell on the 3d of June, 1864, pierced by six bullets, while leading his regiment up to the enemy's works at Cold Harbor.

Believing that the memory of such a life and death should be cherished; that the State and City of New-York, which (each separately) made public acknowledgment of the eminent services of the father, should be proud, too, of the son, I have sketched these lines, drawing most of the details from the eloquent "eulogy," already referred to. It is worthy of remark that, in the mother of the wife of Dr. JOSHUA PORTER, (ABIJAH BUEL,) Col. PORTER had, with the General (now President of the United States) who commanded our armies on the battle-field where he fell, a common maternal ancestor.

Goaded by Conscience—A Self-Accused Murderer Gives Himself Up.

From the Chicago Republican, June 23.

At about 9 o'clock last evening, on the corner of Randolph and La Salle streets, Officer MCGOVERN, of the Armory force, was approached by a young man of respectable appearance, who asked to be arrested and taken to some place where he could tell a strange story of his life. The obliging policeman granted the urgent prayer of the petitioner, at the same time entertaining serious doubts about the sanity of the man. At the Armory, he gave the name of C. G. JACOBS. His strange tale is as follows:

About eight months ago he left the residence of his mother, who is a woman of wealth, in Lionda, St. Joseph County, Mich., for Texas, with the intention of going in the cattle business. At St. Louis he left his young wife behind and proceeded on alone. He connected with the members of the mercantile firm of MCCLINTOCK & Co., in that city. He went to Texas, entered into business, prospered beyond his expectations, and in the course of time took up a temporary residence in the town of Bryan. There he became acquainted with some of the best citizens of the place, among them a man named WEATHERBY, a merchant of wealth and high social standing. They became intimately acquainted. WEATHERSBY was a married man, and he was introduced to his home. Shortly after he became acquainted with a fascinating woman in Bryan. Though a married man, he so far forgot his position as to pay her a great deal of attention. He was astonished one day to find that Mr. WEATHERSBY, too, was one of the lady's most ardent admirers, and as she seemed to accord to him her most gracious smiles and sweetest conversation on all possible occasions, jealousy took possession of him, and he fell out with his former friend. He removed from the city, but distance could not heal his animosity, and the evil means he took to get back to Bryan. His infatuation increased, and with it his troubles. WEATHERSBY appeared on the scene; hard words arose, pistols were drawn, threats were made. To save himself, he shot WEATHERSBY dead and fled from Texas. Soon after the Governor offered a reward of $5,000 for his capture, and in his wanderings he was hounded eternally by the cry of murder and the fear of arrest. His life became a burden, and he dare not draw near home. Not knowing what to do, he arrived here yesterday morning from Missouri, and while brooding over his troubles during the day and evening, came to the conclusion that he would surrender himself at once, and end his fears. He has an uncle in this city, Mr. E. JACOBS, No. 65 State-street. The young man appears to be in the possession of all his senses, and told his story without excitement or excuse. He is good-looking, and appears to be about twenty-seven. Inquiries will be made in Texas about the matter of which he spoke and its truth ascertained.

Fruitless Burglary in Maiden-Lane.

Yesterday morning it was found that burglars had been at work during the previous night in the building No. 27 Maiden-lane, at the corner of Nassau-street. Capt. DECAMP, of the Second Precinct, being notified, went to the house and, upon examination, was convinced that the thieves were concealed in the premises before they were closed on Saturday, as there were no marks of violence on the outside doors. On the second floor they had forced in the door opening into the premises of FREDERICK J. EMMERICH, importer of optical and mathematical instruments. The safe door was open and the interior, showing that it had been thoroughly ransacked. Capt. DECAMP sent for Mr. EMMERICH, who lives at No. 131 Hudson-street, Hoboken. Upon his arrival he was greatly agitated upon discovering that a tin box had been stolen from the safe, in which were three $1,000 and one $500 United States bonds, and $1,500 in Hoboken Volunteer bonds. He was also of the opinion that a number of opera-glasses had been taken, but could

UNDER THE WATER.

Condition of the Monitors Sunk in Charleston Harbor—The Rebel Torpedo-Boat.

The Charleston (S. C.) News publishes a long account of the operations thus far pursued by the wrecking-machine of the Monitor Wrecking Company in Charleston Harbor, from which we quote:

"The Weehawken lies due east and west on a bottom of mud, and there is about eight feet of water over her at low tide. In this position she is a dangerous obstruction in the channel, and should be removed if possible. All of her machinery has been taken up, and likewise the iron of her turret and deck. Her interior is filled with mud and garbage, among which human bones are here and there visible. Over 200 tons of iron and various metals have been raised from this ship. The Housatonic lies in thirty-six feet of water just over the bar, sixteen miles from the city. She rests on a hard shell bottom, and lies north-west and south-east, upright on her keel. The water outhere is beautifully blue and clear, and the divers prosecute their work with much less difficulty than at the Weehawken. Her decks, masts and rigging have all been eaten away by the worms, and little else is now left of her but the huge black hull. Her propeller, shaft, chains and anchors and a large portion of her machinery have been hoisted from her by the machine, and also two of the smaller guns composing her armament. The rest of them were taken up by the Government several years ago. The Government has a buoy planted about 300 yards east-south-east of this wreck, which enables the wrecking-steamer pretty closely as to her whereabouts. To render the matter a certainty, however, Capt. SOAMES, when he leaves her to come up to the city, marks her position with a buoy fastened to the centre of her hull. About twenty feet south of the wreck of the doomed ship lies the hull of her destroyer, the Confederate torpedo-boat. She has been visited by the Captain, who reports her to be lying bottom upward, and seemingly in good preservation. There are no holes in her hull, and the wings of her diminutive propeller, now uppermost, seem to be in good running order. She did her work effectually. In the hull on the port quarter of the huge ship is a jagged hole large enough to drive a carriage and pair through. The heavy oaken ribs and thick planking has been torn in with tremendous power, and the Housatonic must have gone down with but little preparation. Her diminutive but dangerous foe met with a similar fate, and the two now rest in silence, side by side, at the bottom of the sea."

The Emperor of Brazil Not to Visit the United States.

A letter received in St. Louis, on Thursday last, from a high source in Rio de Janeiro, describes the departure of the Emperor for Europe, and sets forth the unwelcome intelligence that his absence from home cannot be prolonged sufficiently to permit his visiting this country. From the St. Louis Democrat we make the following extract from the letter, the date of which is May 7:

"The Emperor left this morning in the British royal mail steamer Douro for Europe. I had a very agreeable conversation with him yesterday at his farewell audience, the only time I have been to Court since you left here, but I thought it was not well to let him go away without showing him this mark of respect. He received me very kindly, and assured me that he entertained the most distinguished admiration for the institutions of our country.

His leave on this occasion is only for a year, and the voyage undertaken entirely on account of the Empress' health. He cannot therefore visit the United States, as he was so anxious to do. The Empress is looking very badly, and bears evidence in her appearance of the sincerity of the motive assigned for the Emperor's voyage.

The Princess Imperial was sworn in as Regent on the 20th inst., and assumed today, upon the departure of her father, the duties of the office."

The Galveston News asserts that the present Radical Party is composed of the fag ends of the Federal Party (the Republican Party during the war,) and of the Confederates, and that consequently all the negroes ought to vote the Democratic ticket.

MONDAY, June 26—A. M.

The trade of the past week was generally active both here and at the Cotton ports. The exports of Domestic Produce from New-York reach nearly five millions for the week, and from the South in Cotton alone about three millions. The Export of Specie of all kinds from New-York about two and a half millions, of which $1,872,000 in American Gold Coin. The price of Gold is a fraction higher at the close than on Saturday week, though the Treasury and the Banks have gained in Gold notwithstanding the moderate withdrawals for export. The Treasury now holds in Coin $92,249,000, and the Banks and Bankers hold $16,928,000 Gold Notes against the Treasury. By the prepayment of the July Interest this week, the relative figures will no doubt be changed five or six millions, without reducing the actual Coin in the Treasury materially. The Secretary of the Treasury has very properly restored the use of $100 Gold Notes in the payments out for Interest and the payments in for Customs, so that little Gold Coin is now handled in either operation. The convenience is appreciated as well by the Importers who have Customs to pay, as by the receivers of Gold Interest on the Public Debt.

The Treasury will sell at least $2,000,000 Gold on Thursday next, but this will be balanced by the receipts of the week for Customs.

The Import trade continues good for the Summer months; the amount of Foreign Goods marketed at New-York last week was about $6,000,000, while there was an increase of Goods in Bond of $1,500,000. The Domestic Commission business is active in all Cotton fabrics, and quite satisfactory, we believe, in Woolen Goods. For the Wool clip some Currency has gone to the Country this week in National Bank Notes and Greenbacks, and we hear less of the superabundance of Bank Notes.

A slight ripple in the Money market was caused on Wednesday and Thursday by the break-down in the Rock Island speculation in Wall-street, which from its suddenness caused a momentary shock to Railway collateral with Money lenders, but after reviewing and strengthening their "margins" they seemed ready at the close of the week to accept much the same cheap rates for Money as before. They are more induced to this course as the Street has become bare of nearly all the Public Funds of the United States, and the Gold operators carry over their balances for the most part free of Interest and sometimes on a bonus for the use of their Gold. The large variety of Railway Mortgages pressing on the market, mostly for account of new undertakings, fail to attract the Banks, or other Money lenders, as buyers, and, when the Bonds are not well known on the Stock Exchange, they are not readily available for hypothecation.

The "unpleasantness" on the Exchange referred to above has already had the effect of stirring up a formidable bearish interest against the Railway market, and, on the other hand, as only one of the Bull cliques was compromised by the Rock Island failure, there is still a reasonable prospect of a lively time on both sides the account.

This week begins the great July Interest payments. The United States Treasury will lead off, this morning. The various offices (the principal place of payment being at the New-York Office) will be prepared for $27,695,690 Gold Interest, due in July, though we doubt whether more than $23,000,000 will be called for before the 1st of August. The Pacific Roads, the States of Alabama, Massachusetts, New-York, &c., will also pay out, in the aggregate, about $5,000,000 Gold Interest in July, making over thirty millions in Gold by way of half-yearly income to our own people and foreign holders of our Bonds. The latter, for the greater part, will no doubt be reinvested in American Stocks, and as far as practicable in our Public Funds. The Domestic holders of Gold Coupons and Registered Gold Interest, whether received at the Treasury or on State or Railway Bonds, would do well to reinvest in United States 5-20s 6 ₱ cents or the New 5 ₱ cent. Loan, either of which can be had in exchange for Gold at the counters of the Government dealers, or, so far as the New Loan is desired, at the counter of the Treasury Office of every denomination from $50 to $10,000. Of the 5-20s 6 ₱ cent. Bonds, the 1867s and 1868s are in some respects preferable. They will be the last to be called in for conversion by the Treasury. They can be had ex-July coupon at or slightly under the present price of Gold, which, from the recent advance to 112¼ ₱ cent. has also brought the other 5-20s and the New 5 ₱ cents below the par of Gold. But this fact only affords the greater inducement to the receivers of Gold Interest to place their reinvestments with the Government, as, by all odds, the safest, least questionable and most comfortable of all security for quiet, prudent people and their provident institutions. As the current sensations of Railway expansion—very flattering to our American pride, but a little fast—and of Municipal jobbery, now look, the time may not be very distant when this preference will be even more widely appreciated than it was after the War, and prove as remunerative in the end.

To the Gold Interest of thirty odd millions, the July Dividends, payable in Currency, will certainly add as much more. Some of the City Banks pay at a less rate than last July, and a few of the Railway lines in this neighborhood have not yet determined upon their Dividends. The States have also reduced the Principal of their Debts, in several instances, since last July, while on the other hand the new Railway Mortgages have run up to a large figure, and a number of the old Capitals considerably increased. We begin our usual Half-yearly table of Dividends, this morning, promising additions from day to day, as they are advertised. Of the thirty-seven States, twenty-three will pay (if our information is correct about Alabama) about $6,599,753 July Interest, and of the remainder, five are unable to pay at present, and nine owe little or no debt.

At the Exchange Saturday there was renewed activity on the Railway list, and on Western Telegraph. The Bull interest moved with some confidence, after the early morning prices, and with some exceptions like Wabash and North-west Common, prices were better than at the close on Friday. The party in Lake Shore evidently felt stronger, and there was a larger demand for New-York Central. Wabash sold below 57 ₱ cent., and North-west at 72½@72 ₱ cent. The weakness in Hannibal and St. Joseph continued, sales at 79½ ₱ cent.

The Boards adjourned early, as usual on Saturdays in the Summer season. Later in the day the following quotations were made in front of the Exchange on Broad-street, as compared with Friday night:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The Orleanists, it is asserted, in case the elections show monarchical majorities, will move for a Constitution, and then offer the throne to the Comte DE CHAMBORD, and, in the event of his declining, to the Comte DE PARIS. Addresses from thirty-six departments, expressing confidence in the Assembly and the Executive, are officially published. The continued absence of the Assembly from Paris strengthens the suspicion that the capital is disturbed. There is a vast deal of destitution and suffering in Paris, and 240,000 people are said to be dependent on charity. The review at Longchamps is again postponed. Deposits will be received at the Bank of France on and after today. GAMBETTA offers his services to the Republic. The trial of ASSY, ROSSEL and ROCHEFORT has been postponed again on account of the elections. Gen. BOURBAKI has entirely recovered and is in command at Lyons, M. RENAN has taken up his residence at Venice. Prisoners returning from Germany say the people were friendly to them, but the authorities treated them harshly. Forty-seven ships of the French Navy have been disarmed, and 15,000 sailors dismissed from the service....At the banquet of the Cobden Club on Saturday evening, Earl GRANVILLE said the settlement of the Alabama question was a great and good work, showing how dissensions which might become great quarrels should be settled, leaving only friendship, peace and goodwill. The Marquis of RIPON described the Treaty of Washington as an equal contract between free neighbors....The formation of a new Spanish Cabinet has been intrusted to Marshal SERRANO....M. FAVRE has assured the Italian Government that the Papal troops under Gen. CHARETTE in the French Army are explicitly declared to belong to the French Army....The working men of Verviers, in Belgium, are quiet....GREGORY, Patriarch of Constantinople, has resigned, and the Porte has accepted the resignation. A Provisional Patriarch has been elected by the Greek Synod.

GENERAL.

The Brazilian Chambers recently voted on the emancipation clause in the speech from the throne, and the Government was sustained by 28 majority. The debate on the Emancipation bill had not begun.

Later advices from the West and California narrate the details of recent Indian outrages in Arizona and Texas. One man was tortured to death by fire, and the other butchered. A body of Government troops report having killed forty-three Apaches and recovered a large quantity of stolen property.

In Florida there has much rain fallen recently, and grass is abundant; but cotton is inferior to last year's growth, and may not reach an average crop. In South Carolina enough rain has fallen for three crops, and a falling off in cotton is anticipated.

In the Superior Court at Northampton, Mass., on Saturday, Judge PITMAN sentenced E. H. BENJAMIN and C. M. DUNBAR, the Belchertown cattle thieves, on five indictments each, for burglary and larceny, to six years in the State Prison. Five Northampton liquor-dealers were given from two to five months.

The Amador County miners were still defiant and resolved to prevent work. The Governor of California has ordered troops to the scene of the strike.

The corner-stone of the new State Capitol at Albany was laid on Saturday, despite the storm, which drenched all participating. As soon as the Grand Lodge was opened by M. W. JOHN H. ANTHON, Grand Master, HAMILTON HARRIS, Chairman of the Capitol Commissioners, made an address detailing the history of the erection of the building. Rev. Dr. HULLEY then made a prayer, and was followed by Gov. HOFFMAN in an address, in which he referred to the growth of the State as shown in the need for a building of such grand proportions as this. He closed by depositing in a cavity of the corner-stone a box containing various articles. Grand Master ANTHON then laid the corner-stone in accordance with the ritual of the Masonic Order.

The State Department, in reply to letters asking for the Cunderango plant, the recently-discovered cancer remedy, informs the applicants that the supply received is exhausted. The success of the remedy in all cases in which it has been used is reaffirmed.

Hostilities have broken out among the rival tribes in the Feejee Islands, and cannibalism is being indulged in to an unlimited extent by the Levonhi faction, who recently professed Christianity. King THAKAMBA is getting his forces ready to attack them.

Gen. ROSECRANS appeals to the American people for contributions to the fund for the Gen. Thomas Monument, to be erected in Central Park, New-York.

LANSING HER, an inmate of the Auburn Prison, has fallen heir to $150,000. He was a resident of Ithaca, where he married a lady in good standing. The criminal is known by the aliases of "Sturges" and "Lorenzo C. Stewart." His term expires soon, when he will be tried on an indictment for robbery in Syracuse.

Gov. Hoffman's Latest Oration.

Gov. HOFFMAN was never noted for the good taste or appositeness of his public utterances. With a few exceptions his appearance in public has been marked by an uneasy consciousness of his conspicuous political position, and an irrepressible tendency to obtrude on public attention his personal relations toward questions of current politics. His speech on Saturday, at Albany, is a case in point. It is easy to imagine the simplicity and elevation which would have marked the words of any of the great Governors of our State, had they been required, in the name of its people, to preside over the laying of the corner-stone of a capitol. The controlled and elegant eloquence of JAY, the straightforward manliness of CLINTON, or the more elaborate but always nicely appropriate expressions of SEWARD, would not have failed in fitness to a ceremony which might fitly have suggested something more than petty criticism and misplaced special pleading. But Mr. HOFFMAN cannot readily accommodate himself to requirements with which the associations of his public career and his personal sentiments and aspirations are in conflict. The baser necessities of his position compel him to be the instrument of a cunning, unscrupulous and greedy political Ring. His inglorious services as the Tammany figure head are repaid by the substantial honors of the Governorship, with a contingent claim on the empty honors of the Presidential nomination. Gov. HOFFMAN apparently finds it exceedingly difficult to divest himself of the consciousness of his very equivocal position.

In his speech of Saturday, the Governor accordingly plunged almost immediately into a spasmodic protest against the current style of political criticism, from what he chooses, with stilted affectation of superiority, to designate as the "partisan Press." He dragged from the archives a bill for the erection of the present Capitol building, bearing the title of "A bill for the improvement of the Hudson River below Albany, and for other purposes," and asked his hearers to imagine "how the ears of Governor and Legislature would have tingled under the sting of criticism," had they suffered such a glaring inconsistency between the the title and the contents of a bill to exist in these days. We are happy to believe that the Governor is right. We remember distinctly several occasions during the past Winter when the Governor's ears and those of his confederates in the Legislature have been made to "tingle" for just this offense, and we hope the time is far distant when, if discovered, it will be allowed to pass in any instance without the prompt and thorough application of the "sting of criticism" to the offenders. His Excellency has not far to seek if he would discover the cause of the happy immunity of Gov. CLINTON from that unpleasant sensation of the ears, of which he himself seems to have so lively an appreciation. The people of the State and the Press had much more reason to trust their representatives at the opening of the present century, than they have in this its eighth decade. Though there were not then lacking, as a slight acquaintance with early State history would inform the Governor, journals that allowed party rancor to obscure the dictates of justice, they did not and could not shake the confidence of the people at large in the integrity and purity of their public men. and Gov. HOFFMAN must allow the suggestion, visionary as it will probably seem to him, that the only way by which criticism could be disarmed then, or can be now, is as open to him as it was to "honest and good GEORGE CLINTON."

This allusion to his sufferings at the hands of the Press was not the only instance, in the speech of Saturday, of the Governor's mal-adroit reference to subjects utterly repugnant to the occasion. In paying a tribute to the progress of the country, he went aside from propriety, as well as from historical accuracy, to sustain the moribund Democratic dogma of State sovereignty in its extremest sense. Alluding to the slaveholders' rebellion, he said:

> "The Union was saved, and it was saved because the States of which it was made up were, each of them, an independent Government, and had the self-reliance which comes of independence. The Union was saved, not because it had what is called a strong Government, ruling, as all strong Governments do, over a weak people, but the people were strong and used to self-reliance; and they were able, through their State, county and town organizations, (our own beloved State being in the front rank,) to defend the integrity of the Union, upon the maintenance of which, as a union of sovereign States, they knew depended the welfare and happiness of all."

If it be true that the Union was saved solely by the self-reliance that came of independence in the States, what is to be said of the Southern States, where independence was far more regarded and cherished than in the North? The Southern States, champions of "sovereignty" and "independence," made rebellion, and failed. The Northern States, under the almost unbroken control of the Republican Party, which rejected the idea of State sovereignty as opposed to the idea of national sovereignty over national interests, opposed that rebellion, and triumphed. With the Democracy in full retreat from their old positions, their rear covered by the most ardent protestations of respect for the recent amendments to the Constitution, we question the policy of Gov. HOFFMAN'S parading in public the doctrine which has caused his party the worst of its now keenly felt disgrace.

Still more may be questioned the appropriateness of his allusion to the National Guard, as "armed, equipped, disciplined, officered, ready at a moment's notice to defend the honor of the State and the rights of its citizens, as well as the Union, of which it is the chief member." What does the Governor mean by this definition of the purpose of the National Guard? He knows that the honor of no State, nor the rights of its citizens, can be threatened by foreign Powers, which do and must treat solely with the National Government. From what other source does he mean to insinuate the possibility of danger? Does he intend to direct the suspicions and fears of his partisans toward the Government of the United States, in the spirit of the vaporing of the New-York World previous to the last election? It is not impossible. But he would do well to remember that he is treading here on treacherous ground. His followers are not gifted with a capacity for making fine distinctions. They catch more easily the tone and temper of a leader than his subtle reservations and qualifications. It was just such foolish indulgence in vague appeals to the partisan passions and prejudices of ignorant men that prepared the way in the South for the men that openly "fired the Southern heart."

Dumas he Younger on the Future of France.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS—fils, as the French journals still persist in calling him, albeit the père has passed away—has written a notable letter on the present state and future needs of his countrymen. The letter is chiefly remarkable for three things. It is extremely long—filling upward of four columns of L'Opinion Nationale—it contains very little that is new, and it is, withal, very readable. M. DUMAS has been to Versailles to see, because, as he says, to see is to know and to know is to foresee. This great truth, it appears, he found embodied in that remarkable man, M. THIERS, who has seen, known and predicted everything. M. DUMAS has also done a little in the prophetic line, though, of course, at an immense distance behind the great M. THIERS. For example, in a novel published three years ago, the philosophic ALEXANDRE did solemnly enunciate these startling facts, that the old society was everywhere crumbling, and that all original laws, all fundamental institutions, both human and divine, were being surrendered and called in question. Further, a few months later this far-seeing novelist wrote in this sybilline strain to the editor of the Gaulois, who had asked him to furnish some articles of literary criticism: "What's the use? Is there anybody who, in a year or two from now, will occupy himself about our books and our plays. The drama will no longer be in the theatres; it will be in the legislative chamber and in the streets. Literature is played out, action is about to begin."

After having triumphantly vindicated his right to claim possession of the divining rod and the prophetic mantle, M. DUMAS proceeds to give the world an insight into the inner consciousness of M. THIERS. As a preparative for this we are treated to the aphorism that "in France nothing is so easy as to be proclaimed great, while nothing is so difficult as to be admitted to be honest." We are then informed with impressive gravity that "M. THIERS will neither prove a MONK nor a WASHINGTON; he will be THIERS." To the reader vaguely speculating over the significance of this mystic phrase, M. DUMAS adds, rather more explicitly, that, order once restored, the French Executive in the person of THIERS will, in effect, say to the nation, "Choose your Government freely, loyally and intelligently if you can—and name whom you please, provided it is not I. Then he will remain quietly at home, if he has by that time a home at which to remain." Alongside of the French novelist's opinion of his political hero, it may not be uninteresting to place that of KARL BLIND, the German socialist, conveyed in a late communication to the Neue Freie Presse. "CHANGARNIER and DUCROT would fain play the part of MONK at once. THIERS only hesitates from tactical motives. At the same time, he has no desire to be set aside by his rivals. Hence he rather keeps with MCMAHON, the Bonapartist, in order not to be ousted by the Generals of the united royal lines. THIERS, too, means to have his thrust at the Republic, only his mode of fencing is a different one."

Descending to the rôle of historian, M. DUMAS informs his countrymen that for some seventy years they have been nourished upon fictions—upon words that signified absolutely nothing. Liberty, military glory, universal suffrage, the nation, universal brotherhood—in short every idea that has dominated Frenchmen since '89 has been either burlesqued or misdirected. To this pass it has come at last, that there is no historical formula which has not been created and dissolved in France, none of her political expedients which has not been both done and undone. The plan, then, evidently, is to begin at the beginning. Everybody is calling loudly for the man who is to save the nation. "He is not far to seek," says M. DUMAS, with an inspiration of common sense; "you have him very close at hand; it is you, and I, and all of us." The individual—"the being autonomous and self-knowing"—is, it appears, non-existent, or at least, very rare in France. When a Frenchman gets up in the morning, he requires other five or six people to assist him in getting through the day. First he needs a policeman to protect him in the street, next a soldier to protect him at the frontier, then a professor to teach his children, still further a priest to teach him morality, some unfortunate or other to go and take the chance of getting killed in his stead, and last of all a king or emperor to keep the machine of state in motion. This eminently lucid and comprehensive detail of a Frenchman's "doubles," forms the key to the new political gospel according to DUMAS. The Germans killed the soldier and the substitute—the Commune extinguished the policeman, the professor, the priest and the emperor. A very obvious opening has thus been made for every man becoming his own policeman, soldier, substitute, &c., and herein lies the future salvation of France. Of course, M. DUMAS being a great literary artist, does not descend from his lofty platitudes quite so suddenly as this, but, in plain terms, this is what his specific amounts to. Ten years of this régime will pay off the hundreds of millions of new debt, will restore the lost provinces, and will make France "the foremost nation in the world." The period required is moderate, but M. DUMAS seems rather apprehensive that to a volatile people it may seem too long. Let him reconsider the matter, and see whether he could not conscientiously advise every Frenchman to become his own baker, tailor, boot-maker and builder, and perhaps the great regeneration could be effected in half the time, to the great satisfaction of France and her latest prophet.

Telegraphic Enterprise in South America.

Nothing more distinctly marks the progress of the age than the rapidity with which the magnetic telegraph is encompassing the sluggish States of the South American continent, and eradicating those worn-out ideas implanted years ago by the Spanish adventurers, and which for centuries have been zealously nurtured under the powerful protection of the Society of Jesus. Our correspondent in Montevideo informs us of telegraphic projects in South America, both by sea and land, some in course of projection, some nearly completed, and others in contemplation, which will not only rival in magnitude the great lines now in operation over Continental Europe and Asia, but will favorably compare in extent with the mammoth enterprises extending over the length and breadth of the sister continent of the North. Among the many South American telegraphic schemes, those that appear most likely to be speedily consummated are the lines now being erected along the South Atlantic coast. A liberal subsidy granted by the Republic of Uruguay to an English company is enabling it to extend its wires from the Rio de la Plata to Yaguaron, and, as the lines already reach southward from Rio de Janeiro to Porto Alegro, both Montevideo and Buenos Ayres will soon be in telegraphic connection with the Brazilian capital. Our correspondent further informs us, that another important concession has just been made by the Government of Brazil to Señor Don JOSE LANAS, of Buenos Ayres, who is constructing the line from Rio de Janeiro to Bahia and Para, near the southern delta of the Amazon. Another great work, the Transandine telegraph, is announced as having recently been completed from Buenos Ayres as far as San Luis, a wealthy province in the interior of the Argentine Republic. This line follows the banks of the Rio Parana to the important inland City of Rosario, thence along an excellent highway through the rich districts of Santa Fé and Cordova to San Luis; from San Luis the work is being rapidly pushed forward to the base of the Andes, where it will be met by a snow cable, now being laid across Mount Tupungato, one of the loftiest spurs of the Cordilleras, thus connecting Santiago, the capital of Chili, and Valparaiso, on the Pacific slope, with the great South Atlantic ports of Buenos Ayres, Montevideo, Rio de Janeiro, Bahia and Para. To extend the magnetic girdle still further, a company has been organized in Valparaiso and Lima to construct an overland line along the South Pacific coast from Valparaiso to Coquimbo through the Chilian province of Atacama and the Peruvian desert of Arcana; thence to Cobija and Arica to Arequipa, from which place there will shortly be established both telegraphic and railroad communication with Lima and Callao.

A distance of less than two thousand miles to Panama, along the richest portion of the South Pacific coast, tapping Guayaquil, Las Esmeraldas, and all the important ports of the United States of Colombia, alone remains to place the United States and Europe in momentary communication with all the great commercial points on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the South American continent. With these encouraging facts in consideration, can there be urged a stronger argument in favor of the expeditious prosecution of the plan lately proposed to lay an ocean cable from New-York to Para, thus achieving, as the grand result, the complete engirdling of both hemispheres with the electric current?

New Marine Signals.

Every invention which tends to lessen the dangers of those who go down to the sea in ships, must be hailed with especial gratitude. How little has really been accomplished in this direction, is from time to time made sadly evident by such heart-rending disasters as the foundering of the Captain, or, more recently, of the steamer Collingwood, from Liverpool to Bombay, which is supposed to have gone down with all on board. Perils like this, apparently no human foresight or skill can altogether guard against, at least with our present lights. But these, after all, are not the contingencies most dreaded by modern mariners, who have not lost any of the hardihood which so astonished and shocked the Roman poet. A lee shore concentrates for the most skillful sailor more terrors than all the fury of wind and wave on the open sea. And, happily, against this danger science is constantly discovering new and more effectual safeguards.

Two of the most interesting and successful of these have lately been brought forward in Great Britain, where more attention has been given to this subject than in any other country. One is an ingenious application of the electric light to the illumination of buoys and beacons at a distance from the shore. The experiment was tried at Granton, in Scotland, it is said with the most satisfactory results. A submarine cable was laid between the breakwater at Granton, and the chain pier at Trinity, half a mile distant. The operator, stationed about the middle of the breakwater, produced a brilliant intermittent light in front of an ordinary light-house reflector at the point of the pier. "The flashes," we are told, "were emitted with great facility, and it was found that as many as five hundred could be transmitted in a minute, though the machine can be regulated to send one every second, or at any other desired interval."

The other device is even more curious, if not more useful. It consists of an "inextinguishable storm and danger signal light," patented by an Englishman named NATHANIEL HOLMES. The peculiarity of this light is, that not only is it not extinguished by water, but that contact with that element is the only means of igniting it. Thrown upon the surface of the sea it at once produces a light of intense brilliancy, which neither wind nor storm can quench, and by the aid of which photographs may be taken. It likewise burns steadily for a long while, and can be seen at a great distance in the open air. In an experiment tried not long since, by a number of scientific gentlemen, the value of the new signal seems to have been conclusively established. "A lamp," we are assured by Nature, "was placed in a bucket of water, on the top of Primrose Hill, and the light was so intense that after the signal had been burning for twenty minutes, small newspaper print could be distinctly read at a distance of seventy feet, notwithstanding the night was dark and foggy."

If all that is claimed for this invention be true, it is not easy to overestimate its advantages. Not the least of these are, that the signal is compact, easily portable, inexpensive and non-explosive. The lamp used for the purpose is simple in its construction, and so contrived that when once used it may be thrown away. It will be readily seen, that such an apparatus would be of vast use in many marine emergencies. "In cases of shipwreck," says Nature, "a few lamps thrown on the sea would illuminate the entire scene," and greatly facilitate rescue. Equally efficacious would be its use in connection with life-buoys flung overboard to drowning men. Without some such appliance, in fact, the buoy on a dark night is almost useless. In life-boat service its value is obvious, and in rocket-firing, for the purpose of connecting a shipwrecked vessel with the shore, its flame, it is suggested, would serve to indicate the position of the rocket line on the water. Such are its main and most important uses. But there are many other minor purposes of scarcely less moment to which it might profitably be adapted—such, for example, as ship and railway signals, tide and harbor warnings and the like. Indeed, in almost every contingency where a strong, brilliant light is needed for a temporary purpose, this signal, which lasts for forty minutes and is not in the least affected by water or heat, would be invaluable.

It would be well if our Coast Survey made speedy trial of these inventions, and finding them to be all that they are represented, secured their advantages for our own coast. Our coast service has never yet been brought to the highest attainable perfection, and its efficiency will not be impaired, however contrary to its traditions, by the acquisition of these latest fruits of foreign research and ingenuity.

Another Lesson to Railway Companies.

We are glad to see the growing tendency of passengers to resist, and of the Courts to punish, the arbitrary exactions of railway companies and the overbearing insolence which too often characterizes their employes. It seems to be a part of the creed of every one of these people, from President to brakeman, that their office elevates them to an immeasurable altitude over the public they are supposed to serve, and gives them the right to bully and browbeat at their sovereign pleasure. When they condescend to the level of this inferior class at all, it is usually for studied incivility and often for grosser insult and outrage. It is familiar to the experience of all travelers in this country that a courteous answer from a railway official is scarcely to be expected, and volunteered information not at all. Now, at least four cases have been brought to public notice within a brief period where, for no offense at all, or merely technical violations of unimportant rules, passengers have been abused and maltreated in the grossest manner. These cases have been made public by the praiseworthy resolution of the injured passengers in seeking legal redress, which, it is gratifying to know, in most instances has been already obtained, and the offending companies mulcted in heavy damages. How often similar outrages pass unnoticed and unpunished through the supineness of their victims, can only be conjectured. Our own estimate would be a large one.

The latest instance of this sort where exemplary justice has been secured by unusual persistence and courage, is the suit of COLEMAN against the New-York and New-Haven Railway Company, decided, after three or four years' of litigation, in favor of the plaintiff, with damage to the amount of nearly four thousand dollars. This case is interesting as a test case, and valuable as a precedent. Its cause of action illustrates, and its result pointedly condemns, one of the commonest and most annoying of the many flimsy pretexts for the exercise of railway rapacity. Mr. COLEMAN had bought what is called an "excursion" ticket between two stations on the road. An excursion ticket, as most of our readers doubtless know, includes two tickets, good for passage respectively to and from each of the included points. By some accident, Mr. COLEMAN, in making his first trip, found he had mislaid the proper ticket, and presented the other. This, it will be seen, was evidence in itself that the fare had been paid, and it really made no difference which ticket was used on either trip. Yet the conductor refused to receive the ticket, demanded the fare, and, on Mr. COLEMAN'S refusal to pay it, ejected him from the train, and forced him to walk some miles to the nearest station. This trouble and inconvenience have now been tardily recompensed by the verdict already mentioned, and the railway company taught a lesson, which it will be likely to enforce on its servants hereafter.

Another case identical in principle has arisen on a Southern railroad. A gentleman having a through ticket from New-York to Savannah stopped over one train at Columbia. On resuming his journey the conductor rejected the check given by the conductor on the previous part of the route, and demanded full fare. The passenger, on declining to pay this, was put off the train, with his baggage, in an almost impassable swamp, and in a drenching rain, and, as in the former case, many miles from the nearest town. He has brought suit against the company, laying his damages at $20,000, a sum which, under the circumstances, is not exorbitant. We trust that his success will furnish another proof to these grasping corporations that the day of their despotism is drawing to a close, and that they can no longer authorize or permit with impunity the abuse or robbery of their passengers.

MINOR TOPICS.

Mayor HALL has written a letter to President GRANT suggesting that before a pardon be extended to Congressman BOWEN, he be required to disclose the means by which he, or his counsel, procured a fraudulent decree of divorce from the County Clerk's office in this City. He says, the "authorities here are desirous of exposing and punishing the fraud which was committed in the interest of Mr. BOWEN." We are glad to learn that the "authorities here" are anxious to punish a fraud of any kind committed by one of their officials, but before they call upon the President of the United States to aid them in pouncing upon one of their small hirelings in the County Clerk's office, would it not be well for them to strike for higher game? Let them hunt up and punish the perpetrator of the frauds in the Controller's office, by which more than six millions of dollars have been stolen from the City Treasury in the last two years. When they have properly disposed of him, let them search out and punish the Democratic politicians who forged the seal of the Court and the names of the Judges in this City to four or five thousand naturalization papers in the Fall of 1868. If Mayor HALL really desires to punish frauds, without regard to the person or persons in whose interest they were committed, he can find work enough within the precincts of City Hall Park to keep him busy for the next ten years.

The ticket nominated by the Republican State Convention of Iowa, on Wednesday last, is hailed with universal satisfaction by the Republican Press of that State. All speak in the highest terms of the character and ability of the candidates, and predict the triumph of the ticket by not less than thirty-six thousand majority. Col. CYRUS CARPENTER, the nominee for Governor, is a native of Pennsylvania, and was among the earliest and most radical Republicans in his adopted State. He served with credit in the war for the Union, and has since been twice elected Register of the State Land Office, whose duties he performed to universal satisfaction. Dr. H. C. BULLIS, the candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, is a native of Clinton County, New-York, and has been for six years a Senator of Iowa, and is now Acting Lieutenant-Governor. JAS. G. DAY, the nominee for Supreme Judge, and Col. ALONZO ABERNETHY, the candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction, are both natives of Ohio.

Hon. S. S. Cox has written a letter to a Cincinnati paper in which he claims to have delivered the speech against the "Conscription bill" in 1863, which, he says, was erroneously attributed to VALLANDIGHAM, and for which that distinguished martyr was sent into exile. The Times & Chronicle of Cincinnati very pertinently asks, if that be true, why Mr. COX did not go into exile with the martyr and share his punishment. It also calls upon the New-York Congressman to reconcile his present claim with the fact, that in 1861 he tendered his services to the Governor of Ohio to assist in a military capacity, in suppressing the rebellion; and also with the fact that in 1864, while running for Congress, he led off on one occasion in Clarke County, for "three cheers for ABRAHAM LINCOLN."

The municipal laws of this misgoverned City make it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, for any person to be found begging in the streets or public vehicles. On random occasions the Police are seized with one of their periodical impulses to raid, and a score or two of the professional mendicants are arrested, but seldom punished, owing to a mistaken feeling of compassion on the part of the Magistrates. On several of the City railroads, and notably on the Bleecker-street line, the passengers are constantly annoyed by the importunities of beggars, who cloak their mission by a pretense of selling books or pictures. The conductors of these railroads are invariably prompt to expel enterprising newsboys, but in no instance has a beggar been checked, though requests to that effect have often been made. Broadway is lined every day with professional beggars, who are really well off, and the unrestricted movements of these impostors is a disgrace to the City. If we are to have laws against mendicancy, let them either be enforced; otherwise blot them from the statute books.

Advocates of "woman suffrage" have at last found a champion who is in a position to render them some practical service. Gen. STRICKLAND, the President of the Nebraska Constitutional Convention, now in session in Lincoln, has introduced a resolution in favor of extending the right of suffrage to all citizens of the age of twenty-one irrespective of sex. The resolution was, next day, reported favorably by the Suffrage Committee, and stands a good chance of being embodied in the fundamental law of Nebraska. If the right to vote is so highly prized by women as some of the sex would have us believe, we shall now expect to see a wholesale emigration of the sisters to that rising young State. Women are said to be in great demand there, independently of their voting qualities. This may, however, be the reason why Nebraska takes the lead in holding out the tempting bait of the ballot-box.

The last issue of Mayor HALL'S paper, the Leader, comes to us freighted with eighteen pages, or over one hundred columns, of corporation advertising. The assessment on Republican tax-payers to enable the Mayor to get out this number of his weekly will probably be not far from ten thousand dollars, in return for which, if they are foolish enough to pay seven cents for the paper, they will get a hodge podge of political vaporing which can hardly be dignified with the name of argument, of stupid doggerel, and of the sweepings of "personal" journalism.

THE SAENGERFEST.

Reception Concert at the Academy.

The reception concert with which the musical incidents of the twelfth general Saengerfest were commenced last evening was hardly as notable an affair as the importance of the occasion demanded. A short programme, without comprehensiveness or novelty to commend it, was executed, and but one soloist of distinction was heard. The general interpretation of the bill was not remarkable either. The expected chorus of one thousand voices stood forth only four hundred strong, and their work was not conspicuous for its quality. If this evening and to-morrow's events are not more creditable to the projectors and the performers, the present Feast of Song will certainly not be remembered. Yesterday's entertainment was begun with the singing of DEMUTH'S "Lobgesang," which we have heard much better done at Liederkranz Hall, under the superintendence of the same leader, Mr. A. FAUR. Last night, Miss LOUISE LICHTHAY, Miss C. BOSSES and Mr. W. CANDIDUS sang the solos, the lady first [illegible] reciting her share of the cantata with skill and fervor, though both her voice and style are better suited to the requirements of modern opera than to kindred performances. Mr. CANDIDUS, who rendering of the contrapuntal soprano solo for the especial document, has done the audience's part of the task, which involves, for its completion, an interpretation of the exquisite overture far more appreciative and expressive than that body showed. The second element of the concert was without doubt the best. It consisted of the delivery of the first movement of BEETHOVEN'S violin concerto, opus 61, by Dr. LEOPOLD DAMROSCH. Dr. DAMROSCH'S reading of the same composition under the auspices of the Philharmonic Society, two months ago, then exacted a tribute of warm admiration, and we can only add to earlier expressions of praise of his talent as a musician and an executant, the fact that their approval, last night, caused the gentleman to be acclaimed with an enthusiasm, the like of which, amid similar circumstances, we do not recollect. The sustained attention of the audience, (a large one, we ought to have mentioned, but not to the extent of overflowing the house,) was not without effect upon Dr. DAMROSCH'S playing, which was of increased eloquence, so to speak, while distinguished by the purity of tone and faultless intonation heretofore extolled. The third selection of the affair was the single novelty, in shape of a brief battle hymn from WAGNER'S "Rienzi." Without presuming to form an opinion of the chorus from an exposition which was sufficiently earnest to be striking, and to justify a repeat, but was not vigorous or precise enough to do the writer justice, it may be set down as theatrically impressive by a familiar alternation of unsupported voices with well defined progressions intrusted to the brass instruments, and meritorious for its massive instrumentation rather than for the ideas of song or the march movement. Mr. CANDIDUS, to whom was intrusted the solo allotted to the tenor sang flat. The fourth and last piece of the concert was LINDPAINTNER'S "Jubilee" Overture, which was given some weeks ago at Steinway Hall, and which is principally to be admired for the clever and sometimes tormenting treatment of the theme of "God Save the Queen." The overture is one of exceeding difficulty in respect of ever-changing tempos. There was no lack of accuracy in the time, but the paucity of thought in the composition need almost as much ingenuity for their repeated display by the instrumentalists as the composer has evinced in their handling. Mr. BERGMANN was the director during its delivery. The first grand concert of the Festival is to take place this evening at the Rink. BEETHOVEN'S Fifth Symphony, RIETZ'S "Morgenlied" and BRUCH'S "Frithjof Sage" are to be interpreted. This afternoon prize singing relieved by orchestral recitals, will be had at Steinway Hall.

Sunday at Central Park.

Seldom has the visitor to Central Park found as great a throng within its confines as yesterday. The delightful weather, warm but not oppressive, rendered the pastime of a stroll through the grounds something to be agreeably remembered during the week, and the vast number of stranger guests of the City, brought here by the Saengerfest celebration, present in large numbers, will doubtless carry home with them a pleasant Sunday's experience, upon which to expatiate to their friends. The beauties of the day seemed to add fresh charms to the flowers, plants, shrubbery, and manifold objects of interest in this great garden of the people. Lungs were strengthened, and mind and body afforded recreation. Flowers and leaves, with all the colors of the rainbow received new tints from different effects by

THE INDIAN NATIONAL COUNCIL.

Novel Aspect of the Assembly—Feelings of the Wild Chiefs, and the Good Effect of a Friendly Welcome—Conversations to Civilization—Treaty Obligations and the Laws of Congress.

From Our Special Correspondent.

OKMULGEE, Indian Territory, Monday, June 19, 1871.

The political interest of this General Council of the Indian Territory centres in the adoption of the constitution. Until some organic law is established, this is a mere convention of delegates without function or jurisdiction. The battle will be fought to-morrow on an amendment changing the basis of representation in the Senate, introduced by a Seminole member.

THE COUNCIL CHAMBER OF THE MEMBERS.

I have already commented upon the strict decorum that prevails here, parliamentary rules are pretty closely observed, and if our worthy President (Indian Superintendent ENOCH HOAG) does get once in a while a little perplexed, he has the most indulgent body in the world to preside over, and they submit to his rulings with deferential acquiescence. But if the reader could enter this council chamber, where sixty-seven Indian delegates are assembled to deliberate on matters of vital importance to their nation, both eye and ear would instantly be struck with much that is novel and interesting. The building in which they are assembled we will not take into account, because many of the most important political changes in Europe have been dictated by a camp-fire or in some deserted and dilapidated hovel. But what would strike the beholder as most grotesque is the singular mixture of enlightenment with the rudest barbarism. On one bench will be seated a Cherokee or Creek delegate, with Caucasian features, speaking the purest English and dressed in excellent taste. On an adjoining bench will be seen a group of painted and feathered heroes from the Wichita or Cheyenne Agency, all bedecorated with plates and embroidery, and one or two of them bearing a tomahawk. The mere calling of the roll would forcibly strike some people's sense of the ludicrous. The Cherokee delegation heads the list with Christian common-sense names, W. J. ROSS, R. KEYS, S. M. SMITH, ELI TAYLOR; but as the Clerk gets further down the list, he comes across such appellations as War-loo-pi, Ne-wa-ca-mitz, Big Mouth, Spotted Wolf, Yellow Horse, Little Black Kettle.

SENTIMENT OF THE WILD CHIEFS.

As a civilising agency, this "grand council of our red brethren" has achieved marvels. We have Chiefs from the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes, two of the most warlike tribes on the Plains, beside inquiring leaders from a number of less noted wild tribes, such as the Caddes, the Kee-chis, the Wichitas, the Delawares, the I-an-is, and the So-wa-ca-niz. These men have come a long distance, on invitation from their brethren, to join them around their council fire. I find several of these Chiefs, although distinguished for great prowess on the war-path, really desirous of abandoning their present mode of life, and taking up with the habits of civilization. The Superintendent has had numerous private "talks" with these Chiefs, and they all tell the same story. The encroachments of the white man upon their hunting-grounds have rendered their supply of game uncertain; all have suffered in their families or in their tribes from collisions with the white soldiers, and they have become tired of such a life of precariousness and danger. It has been told them that their red brethren in this Territory have adopted the ways of their white brothers, and live in warm, dry houses, have schools for their children, and raise corn and cattle and hogs for their support. They have come to inquire into the truth of this. If they find that their Great Father will give a reservation to each tribe in the Territory, where they will be safe from the encroachments and depredations of the white frontiersman, and if they find that their civilized red brothers will admit them to their great council-fire, and smoke the pipe of peace with them, then they will go back to their people, call them together in council, and set before them the advantages of civilized life, as compared with the life they are now leading. Those Chiefs, with their wise counselors, and their squaws and papooses have come one hundred and fifty miles over the hot, sun-scorched prairie, to carry out these useful ideas. They raise their lodge-poles in the timber, and come to the council-chamber with their interpreters, to see what welcome is extended to them.

A CHARACTERISTIC WELCOME.

Superintendent HOAG informed the Council that, on their invitation, they were now visited by distinguished Chiefs from the Cheyennes, the Arapahoes, and numerous other tribes of the Plains. As these people had manifested sufficient interest in the advancement of civilization to leave their people and attend the Council to learn the purport of their deliberations, he thought it was eminently proper that they should be received with the observance of those ceremonies which, in their minds, would constitute a hearty welcome. The propriety of this suggestion being recognized by all, a recess was taken to extend a formal welcome to their brethren. The salutary effect of this polite attention was apparent. These wild Chiefs, warmed into oratory in expressing their gratitude and delight at the cordial welcome they had received, admitted that before coming among their civilized brethren they were in painful doubt whether this change in their mode of life had not alienated their sympathies from these unregenerate tribes. But they found they were among friends. Not only were they guaranteed security from the encroachments of the white man, but they were offered the example of an improved mode of life, and assistance and instruction proffered them, to place them on the white road (the way of peace.) With the utmost sincerity these chiefs declared their gratification at all they had seen and heard, and solemnly pledged themselves that they would henceforth exercise their influence over their people to hunt the buffalo no more, to steal no more ponies from the white man, and to betake themselves to habits of useful industry.

PROPAGANDISTS OF CIVILIZATION.

The Council will exercise its humanizing influence over all the tribes of the Plains. The leading chiefs and counselors of at least ten tribes are converted into propagandists of civilization. Their sentiments will soon extend to the few tribes on the far North-western Plains. When the reflective Indian has presented to him the contrast between the comfortable homes, the improved farms, the cheerful school-houses, and the assured abundance of their civilized brothers, and the privation, discomfort, and the increasing poverty to which his own mode of life condemns him, he is certain to go back to his people warm in his praises of the hospitable cordiality of the advanced nations, and an unceasing advocate of the adoption of a similar mode of life.

THE SUPREME COURT DECISION IN THE BOUDINOT CASE.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case of BOUDINOT vs. The United States is exciting considerable feeling here, and it may not be without interest to the American people to know how this decision is received among the Indian population. A few days since the matter was referred to the Committee on Relations with United States, to deliberate on, and this afternoon they came in with the following memorial to Congress, setting forth that:

"In this case the Supreme Court of the United States has rendered an opinion which involves questions of the gravest importance to all the inhabitants of the Indian Territory, and makes them justly solicitous as to the security and stability of their rights. Judicially that learned and distinguished tribunal of last resort declares that an act of Congress may supercede a prior treaty, and that the consequences in all such cases give rise to questions which must be met by the political department of the Government. They are beyond the sphere of judicial consequences. In the case under consideration, the act of Congress must prevail as if the treaty were not an element to be considered. Your memorialists presume not to controvert what has thus been declared to be law, however great may be its departure from their own simple conceptions of the justice, the sanctity and the supremacy of treaties concluded under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. It imports us, we fear, all our rights. It commits us wholly to the political department of the Government, and places us entirely at its mercy. In our ignorance we have supposed that treaties were contracts entered into under the most solemn forms, and the most sacred pledges of human faith, that they constituted part of the supreme law of the land, and that they could be peacefully abrogated only by mutual consent. But we are now taught differently. Treaties are now dependent solely upon the forbearance of the political department of the Government, for we are powerless to enforce their fulfillment. If the decision in question is to become part of the settled law of the land, we respectfully implore your honorable bodies not to be unmindful of the promises made to us by your Government, to enact no law that may affect our rights without the most careful consideration. We also respectfully ask that your laws upon the subject of revenue, which gave rise to the case under consideration may be made to conform to the rights guaranteed to the Cherokee nation by artitle 10 of the treaty, concluded August, 1866, with the United States, at least so far as the same may affect the products of their own soil and of the Indian Territory. We also respectfully ask that all further proceedings in the case may be stayed, and all penalties and forfeitures growing out of it be remitted, as the Supreme Court conclude their opinion correctly, as your memorialists fully believe by saying: 'We are glad to know that there is no ground for any imputation upon the integrity or good faith of the claimants which prosecuted the writ of error. In a case not free from doubt and difficulty, they acted under a misapprehension of their legal rights.'"

Mr. W. H. ROSS, Chairman of the Committee, in submitting his report, said that perhaps it was proper that he should give a brief statement of the history of the case. By treaty in 1866 the United States guaranteed to the citizens of the Cherokee nation the right to sell manufactured articles and the products of their farms with the single reservation, that, if introduced into the United States, they should be subject to the same tax that was imposed there upon similar articles. Subsequently Congress passed the Revenue laws, and imposed a duty upon distilled spirits and manufactured tobacco in the United States, and extended its operation to the Territories. In the meantime, after the passage of this act, tobacco factories were established in the Cherokee and Choctaw nations. These were seized by revenue officers, and parties concerned in their proprietorship were arraigned before the District Court of the United States, in Van Buren, Ark., for violation of law. The plaintiffs in error pleaded the provisions of the treaty of 1866, but the Judge ruled that the act of Congress was paramount. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which affirmed the above decision and declared that an act of Congress may supersede a prior treaty, that the consequences resulting belonged to the political department of the Government, and that no judicial cognizance could be taken of them. This decision, the delegate remarked, was final, but it seemed to him to involve questions of the gravest import—not only to the Cherokees, but to all other Indians who have treaties with the United States. The right of Congress to tax one article in the Cherokee Nation implies the right to tax another, and the right to supersede by legislation a stipulation contained in one treaty, involved the right to supersede all others. They were powerless to enforce a fulfillment. Their strength lay in their weakness—in the consideration which was accorded by the powerful to the helpless, by the guardian to the ward. The Cherokee Nation, regarding the issues involved as possessing general importance, employed able counsel to argue the case, but the decision was rendered against them. This fiat of the Supreme Court might involve consequences of greater magnitude than the case then in review. By an amendment to the Constitution all Indians taxed were declared citizens of the United States. Their only security was to be found in the care, forbearance [and good faith of Congress. There was sufficient ground for their solicitude. It was only just that Congress should stay proceedings and remit all penalties and forfeitures in the particular case referred to, as the Supreme Court fully exonerated all the parties concerned from any fraudulent intent. He would petition for the repeal of that section of the Revenue law which superseded the Choctaw treaty, and implore of the Government good faith in all future legislation.

INDIAN.

Synopsis of the Constitution—Further Debate on its Adoption—Address of Superintendent Hoag—Defeat of Mr. Brown's Amendment—Adoption of the Constitution.

From Our Special Correspondent.

OCMULIEE, Indian Territory, Thursday, June 15, 1871.

Having given your readers a report of the debate on the Constitution, framed at the December session, for the government of this Territory, it would, perhaps, be in place to give a synopsis of this instrument. The treaties of 1866, negotiated between the United States and the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, Chicka saw and Seminole nations, respectively, accord to these various nations the right of self-government, as distinct nationalities, and also provide for a political federation of all the tribes living within the Territory, to the end that they may draw themselves together in a closer bond of union for the better protection of their rights, the improvement of their condition and the preservation of their race. The legislative powers of the General Assembly to be organized under the Constitution are restricted to matters and subjects pertaining to the intercourse and relations of the Indian Territory, the arrest and extradition of criminals escaping from one nation to another, the administration of justice between members of the several nations of the said Territory, and persons other than Indians but members of said nations, and the common defense and safety of the nations of said Territory. Upon matters other than those above enumerated the General Assembly has no power to legislate.

The preamble to the Constitution sets forth that the people of the nations of Indians, occupying the Indian Territory, having agreed by treaty with the Government of the United States, and having been invited by its agents to meet in general council under the forms prescribed by the treaties of 1856, relying upon the guidance and favor of Almighty God (no doubt about that being a Christian document) to carry out in a consistent and practicable form the provisions of said treaties at the earliest practicable day, do hereby enact and promulgate the following as the Constitution or organic law of the land.

Article 1 defines the boundaries of the Indian Territory, "which has been set apart and guaranteed by the treaties and laws of the United States as a permanent home for the Indians therein lawfully resident, or such as may be in like manner settled therein hereafter." Each Indian nation that may enter the confederacy has guaranteed to its citizens the same rights of transit and trade in every other nation as they have in their own. But no right of property or lands, or funds owned by one nation, is to be in any manner invaded by citizens of another nation, and it is distinctly affirmed that the rights of each nation to its lands, funds and all other property, shall remain the sole and distinct property of such nation.

Article 2 divides the powers of the Government into three branches—the Executive, the Legislative and the Judicial; and any person belonging to one of these branches is prohibited from exercising the powers belonging to another branch.

Article 3 vests the legislative power in the General Assembly, to consist of a Senate and House of Representatives; the Senate to be composed of one member from each nation containing 2,000 inhabitants, and one member for every additional 2,000, or fraction greater than 1,000 Nations with populations less than 2,000 are allowed to unite and be represented in the same ratio. The Ottawas, Peorias and Qua-paws are allowed one Senator; the Senecas, Wyandottes and Shawnees, one Senator, and the Sacs and Foxes one Senator. The House of Representatives is to consist of one member from each nation, with an additional member for each 1,000 citizens or fraction greater than 500. Both Senators and Representatives are to hold office for a term of two years. Their sessions are to be held annually, commencing on the first Monday of June, and are not to exceed thirty days in duration. The pay of members while in actual attendance is $4 per diem, with an allowance of twenty cents a mile mileage. Power is conferred upon the General Assembly to raise means to support the Government of the Territory, but all bills making appropriations are to originate in the lower House.

Article 4 defines the duties of the Governor and the Secretary, and provides for the appointment of a Marshal, an Attorney-General and two District-Attorneys. All commissions are to be issued in the name, and by the authority of the Indian Territory.

Article 5 regulates the Judicial Department, which is to be composed of a Supreme Court, three District Courts and such inferior Courts as may be found necessary. The General Assembly is to divide the Territory into three districts, as nearly equal in territory and population as may be practicable.

Amendments to the Constitution are provided for in article 6th, which requires a three-fourths vote of both Houses, and then a submission to the people after due notice given. An affirmative vote by three fourths of the National Councils renders the proposed amendment valid.

The following sections are selected from the Declaration of Rights:

SECTION 1. All political power is inherent in the people, and all free Governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit. They have at all times the inalienable right to alter, reform or abolish their form of government in a manner lawfully provided for.

SEC. 2. The free exercise of religious worship, and serving God without distinction of creed, shall forever be enjoyed within the limits of this Territory; provided that the liberty of conscience shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace, safety and good morals of this Territory.

SEC. 3. No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office of public trust in this Territory.

SEC. 4. Every citizen shall be at liberty to speak, write or publish his opinions on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of this privilege, and no law shall ever be passed curtailing the liberty of speech or of the Press.

The legislative business of the session hangs fire, in consequence of the strategy of the Seminole and Chickasaw delegates, who are unwilling to have the adoption of the Constitution brought to a final vote. The sense of the House is largely in favor of adopting that instrument provisionally, and then sending it back with its amended schedule to the various nations for ratification. To adjourn the session without taking some decided action, would be setting a lukewarm example to the National Councils, and as the exigencies of the occasion require the assumption of some responsibility by the General Council, the members from the three larger nations demand that the matter be brought to a close.

The further consideration of Mr. BROWN's amendment to the Constitution being deferred till Monday, (yesterday,) Mr. RUFUS FOLSOM, (Choctaw,) in a brief speech, called for the yeas and nays. After the exhaustive arguments addressed to the House on Saturday, he said he did not see that much remained to be explained. All clearly recognized the necessity of a united form of government to give strength and solidity to their political institutions; and all factious opposition, based upon petty sectional jealousy, should be visited with the severest reprehension of the House. The gentleman who introduced the proposed amendment, had expressed apprehension that the basis of representation established in the Constitution would lead to the absorption of the smaller nations by the more powerful ones. By referring to article 1, section 2, of that instrument, he would find that special provision had been made against any such evil result. The clause referred to provides that "no right of property or lands, or funds owned by any one nation, shall be in any manner invaded by citizens of another nation; and it is hereby distinctly affirmed that the rights of each of these nations to its lands, funds and all other property shall remain the sole and distinct property of such nation." He wished to ask whether a more distinct and satisfactory guarantee against any contemplated invasion upon the rights of the weakest nation could be afforded? That the larger nations were acting in perfect good faith was clearly evidenced by the clause just read. He would take up the time of the Council by no long arguments, and merely wished to instil into the mover of the amendment some little faith in human honesty, and would wish him to believe that a feeling of common interest prompted the members to advocate the adoption of the constitution in its present form.

Mr. PERCY (Chickasaw) could not understand why gentlemen should be in such haste to get this important business off their hands. He believed in making haste slowly, and believed it was their duty to let all know what they were doing. They had in their midst delegates from the Arapahoes, Caddoes, Kee-chis, Wichitas, I-an-is, and various other tribes. They had been invited here to take part in our counsels, and had been intrusted with votes. Was it fair, or even decent, to those members to adopt the Constitution at this early stage, before time had been taken to explain its provisions to them, and to learn whether their views in regard to it were favorable or otherwise?

Mr. JOHNSON (Cherokee) charged the last speaker with "filibustering." It was a simple absurdity to attempt to explain a written constitution to a parcel of wild men, who knew nothing about political guarantees. The whole thing would be Greek to them. They had no form of civil government, no legislative assembly, no Courts of justice. For many of the expressions used in the Constitution they had no equivalent in their tongue. This was not the time to attempt any such undertaking. They should first establish social relations with them, and devote proper time to holding familiar talks, but he would look to see them throw away their war-paint and their blankets before he would attach any weight to their votes on the Constitution.

The President, Superintendent HOAG, here briefly addressed the Council. He did not wish to hurry the members in their deliberations in the least, or to deprive any member of the full expression of his views. He regarded the subject in debate as of the greatest importance, and in deciding it he trusted each would be governed by the purest motives. They were now attended by visitors from more than a dozen tribes, who had not yet adopted a civilized mode of life. They came here attracted by the smoke of the great Council-fire, and to hear the deliberations of their civilized red brothers. For the sake of these wandering tribes, who were rapidly fading before the spread of the white race, for the stability of their own institutions, he trusted that unanimity would prevail. By treaty with the United States, the right of forming a general government had been intrusted to them, and he hoped the exercise of this right, instead of being a cause of dissension and jealousy, would be so improved as to create a unification of interest, and invest them with a power capable of warding off the dangers that encompassed them. Alluding to the visitors from the Cheyenne and Wichita agencies, he said he wished to have the legislative business out of hand, that they might devote some little time to social intercourse with those Chiefs. Several of them were men of distinguished mark among their own people, and possessed great influence for evil or for good. It was the duty of the Council to impress their minds, by conversation with them, and other polite attention, so favorably with all they saw, that they should return to their people earnest propagandists of the cause of civilization, and this Council be marked in the annals of the Indian Territory as remarkable for the good results it produced.

On the President resuming his seat, a cry of question, question, arose, and Mr. BROWN's amendment was put to the House with the following result: Yeas, 5; nays, 35; absent, 28.

The report of the Committee on amending the schedule was next taken up, and it was adopted with a nearly similar vote.

This ends the legislative business. The Constitution as amended will be sent to the Executives of the various nations to be by them submitted to the national councils or the popular vote. Its ratification is regarded as an absolute certainty, and next November the General Council will be called together again to put in motion for a general form of government.

To-morrow I leave here for a return to the United States, having 150 mile of staging between here and civilization, such as it exists in Baxter Springs, Kansas. I have a number of interesting memoranda jotted down during my visit to this strange land, which, with an account of the closing scenes of the session, will form my ultimate letter.

STATE POLITICS.

Affairs in the Twenty-Third Senatorial District—An Old Democratic Quarrel—New and Old Slates—The Twelfth District—The State Engineer and Controller.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Thursday, June 22, 1871.

In the Twenty-third District, Delaware, Schoharie and Chenango, the present Senator, Hon. J. F. HUBBARD, is, from party necessities, the prominent candidate of the Democracy. Mr. HUBBARD has always been considered a good enough voter by the Tammany Ring, but when the Democracy has anything to give in the way of office, they look to it that the Twenty-third District does not get it. Last Spring, when the new Capitol Commissioners were to be changed, Mr. HUBBARD had several long talks with Gov. HOFFMAN, and claims, or rather in the heat of defeat did claim, that his Excellency promised to do his utmost to make Mr. COURTIER, of Schoharie, one of that body. When the slate was produced the Schoharie gentleman did not appear. HUBBARD then tried to have the Commission increased to eight members, giving the Governor the power to appoint two. This he carried in the Senate, but when the Supply Bill, of which the clause relating to the new Capitol was a part, came from the Conference Committee, the Senate Amendment was stricken out and Mr. HUBBARD was inconsolable, and my impression is that he voted against the bill in toto. Starting from this culminating misfortune, the friends of Mr. HUBBARD, believing that he was not properly appreciated in the Senate, announced that he would not again run for that position, but indicated that he would strike for higher game, and generally booked him for Secretary of State. During the past few weeks the Democracy have finished counting noses for the next Senate, and discovering the almost certain result of a Republican majority in that body, they find that they can take no chances. Pressure has been brought to bear, and it is asserted that HUBBARD will forget his anger and run. Before endeavoring to persuade HUBBARD, the name of Mr. COURTIER was extensively discussed, but as he was mixed up in the Erie-Susquehanna fight as a partisan of Mr. JAS. FISK, a strong opposition was found developing against him in his own County of Schoharie. It is probable that a new issue will enter into the contest this Fall, arising from the different views of the people on the Midland Railroad. The Senatorial District is peculiarly interested in this road, and last year a bill was introduced into the Senate, and supported by Mr. HUBBARD, giving the people of the towns which are bonded for the road the power to elect their Railroad Commissioner, taking the appointment of that officer away from the County Judge, who now has it. If the bill had become a law Mr. LITTLEJOHN, who has really borne the burden of the Midland Road upon his shoulders, and who has had to raise the money and supply the energy by which that project has been advanced to its present state of completion, said that he should resign. He could not add to the already laborious burden of his position the necessity of settling the constant feuds that would grow up from the silly manner of chosing officers proposed by this bill. The good sense of the Legislature prevented the bill from becoming a law, but the onus of its support remains, and it will be strange if the many people interested in that road, and appreciating how vital to its success is the activity and ability of Mr. LITTLEJOHN, do not place it beyond the power of Mr. HUBBARD to further interfere with its prosperity. The only Republican prominently named in this district is Hon. J. H. GRAHAM, of Delaware, late member of Congress, and last year State Assemblyman. The Assembly district which Mr. GRAHAM represented last year was Democratic in 1869, sending Dr. ALLABEN. This speaks well for his home popularity. The district is at least a thousand Republican on the State ticket, and it has been long enough represented by a Democrat. If Mr. GRAHAM is nominated he will remedy the past.

In the Twelfth District, composed of the counties of Rensselaer and Washington, the unfortunate fight of J. T. DAVIS last year has given the Democracy hope, but there can be no doubt of Republican success. Mr. BAKER, of Washington, is prominently named. He is a gentleman fully qualified by experience for the position, having served two terms in the Assembly, and being both able and popular, would make a famous run. The Democracy at one time considered that their choice had settled upon JOHN L. FLAGG, Chairman of Railroads in the last Assembly, but after the unfortunate difficulty between IRVING and WEED, and the development of the Delaware and Hudson Canal scheme, the stock of Mr. FLAGG seemed to gradually sink, and it is now only his most enthusiastic friends who think him good for the nomination. J. MCCONIHE, Ex-Mayor of Troy, GEO. C. BURDETT, and JOHN H. COLBY are also named among the Democrats. They claim great unanimity and prophesy that they cannot fail, and claim to speak by the book. In fact, last Spring the City of Troy gave a Democratic majority of 2,700, and it was then said that some of the wards gave a majority greater than the entire population. From this stand-point the Democrats are warranted in talking hopefully.

In the Eleventh District, composed of Dutchess and Columbia, and now represented by Hon. GEORGE MORGAN, Democrat, there will be a change. The district is strongly Republican, but owing to local quarrels in 1869, Hon. A. PALMER failed to receive the nomination, and by the profuse expenditure of money, Mr. MORGAN was run in by a majority of 200. Last Fall, Hon. J. H. KETCHAM, Republican, was elected to Congress by 1,600 majority, so there is nothing to fear. The local trouble that defeated the nomination of Mr. PALMER still exists, but it is hoped that better counsels will prevail and his nomination be made. Mr. PALMER ran for Controller on the State ticket last year, and was considered one of the strongest names on the ticket. The Democrats have dropped their present Senator, he having made a bad record on the Harbor-master fight of 1870. Gen. FARRELL, who at that time considered himself gravely outraged, is understood to be in a state of chronic indignation, that is aroused to intense activity at the mention of Senator MORGAN'S name. It is certain that the Senator acted very strangely at that time, and on his return to Poughkeepsie his constituents are understood to have expressed their sentiments more forcibly than elegantly. The district is easily redeemed, and there should be no excuse for local jealousies that will again endanger it.

STATE ENGINEER.

The statement made some time ago that the State Engineer, VAN R. RICHMOND, would not accept a renomination is entirely unwarranted, that gentleman being desirous to retain the office. In fact, now that the canal policy of the Democracy proposes to place new power into the hands of the State Engineer, the present incumbent is desirous of administering its affairs while the new broom is sweeping, being satisfied that the present one is getting rapidly useless. Mr. RICHMOND has been some forty years a canal man, and during all of that time the new system of locomotion that is now to be tested has been prospected, and he naturally wishes to be at the head of the Department when that work is perfected. The two-term theory worked well as a war cry in 1869, but it won't do in 1871. It is strangely musty and out of order. Hon. S. H. SWEET is probably the strong man if Mr. RICHMOND concludes after this to withdraw, for since Mr. SWEET has been the Deputy Engineer during Mr. RICHMOND'S term, the entire strength of that officer would be thrown for SWEET. No man in the party is more deservedly popular than the last-named gentleman, and a change is made it is almost certain that he will be the lucky nominee.

CONTROLLER.

Gov. HOFFMAN, not always happy in his vetoes, seems peculiarly unhappy in his appointments, and in none more so than in that of Mr. NICHOLS, of Erie, for Controller. This gentleman, running in a strong Democratic district for the Senate, from the vantage-ground of that office found himself beaten by a thousand majority. Hundreds of reasons were advanced as causes for his defeat, and accepted by the party, which was prone to look without vexation upon a rather gentlemanly man in his misfortunes. When Mr. ALLEN was elected to the Appeals, it became necessary to find a man to serve out the remaining portion of the year as Controller. Among the self-abnegating Democracy there was no lack of material from which to select, the whole party seeming at the time anxious to sacrifice itself for the good of the State. Luckily for NICHOLS, the West was in the ascendant at the time, and he received the coveted prize. Then came the nomination of 1870 for the unexpired term, and when the Supply bill was paid this Spring came the true reason why the Democracy of Buffalo repudiated NICHOLS. Now a new question vexes the unterrified. It was understood that the nomination of 1870 was for the unexpired term, now a claim is put in that it was for a full term of three years. This question has been extensively discussed, but it is understood that the Secretary of State will issue the ordinary call for an election to fill all State offices that, under the usual circumstances, would become vacant this year. Should Mr. NICHOLS be nominated, it is to be hoped that the people will take the view of his case taken by the voters of the Thirty-first Senatorial District in 1869. In fact, since the Democracy are wont to assert that it is proper that offices should seek men, and not men offices, the little episode of NICHOLS endeavoring to plead possession in order to hold the Controllership against the well-settled rule of the Constitution, would seem either to abrogate him or to stultify the party.

A Correction.

SENECA FALLS, N. Y., Wednesday, June 21, 1871.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Your Albany correspondent is quite mistaken in his ideas of the situation of affairs in Seneca County, as relates to the question of Senator for the Twenty-sixth District. Hon. S. G. HADLEY will undoubtedly be the choice of this county, as he was in 1869, and no man worked harder for his success than I did at that time, and should do so again with confidence of better results. Mr. HADLEY is thoroughly known through the district, and enjoys the confidence of his party both in and out of this county.

As for myself I have no ambition or inclination in the direction indicated by your correspondent, whose assertions are entirely unauthorized, and show a lack of information as to the political situation of our district, not calculated to inspire confidence in the general accuracy of his letters. His disparaging remarks regarding so earnest and prominent a Republican as Judge HADLEY will be taken at their proper value in this county and district; but as your paper circulates so extensively where the parties most affected are less known, I deem it my duty to correct, in this public manner, the erronous impressions which they are calculated to convey if uncontradicted.

ALBERT JEWETT.

THF OHIO REPUBLICANS.

Their Platform in Full—Neat Acceptance Speech of Gen. Noyes.

The platform reported by Judge WELKER, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, in the Ohio Republican State Convention, and by it unanimously adopted, is as follows:

Resolved, By the Republicans of Ohio in Convention assembled as follows:

1. The Republican Party of the United States may well challenge the admiration and confidence of the country for its patriotism, courage and wisdom in preserving the union of the States; for its justice, firmness and magnanimity in establishing for all the people liberty and equality before the law; for its gratitude and generous provision for the national defenders and pensioners; for its inviolate honor and good faith toward the national creditors, and generally for its successful administration of public affairs in peace as well as in war.

2. We not only recognise the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States as accomplished facts, but also as just, wise and valid exercises of power to be jealously defended and enforced, as part of the Constitution now, henceforth and forever.

3. As it will be necessary and desirable to obtain from duties on imports a large portion of the revenue needed to defray the expenses of the Government, to pay the interest on the national debt, the principal, as it matures on such duties, should be so adjusted as not to prejudice but promote the interests of every section and branch of industry, as far as possible.

4. The present Administration of the National Government has vindicated its right to the continued confidence of the people; its success has been illustrated in the impartial execution of the laws, in its faithfulness, honesty and economy in the collection of public revenues, and in the expenses of the Government, so that while taxation has been reduced to the extent of $160,000,000 per year, the national debt has been liquidated to the amount of over $230,000,000, a reduction unparalleled in history; the Administration has been equally successful in the management of our foreign relations, and has achieved imperishable honor in the settlement of our differences with Great Britain upon terms creditable to both countries, as embodied in the Treaty of Washington; the head of an Administration thus distinguished by success and statesmanship is justly entitled to be regarded as a wise and careful civil magistrate, and his uniform deference to public sentiment shows him to be one whom the country may trust, having fully redeemed the pledge he made before entering upon the duties of Chief Magistrate, that he would have no policy of his own to enforce against the will of the people.

5. That we repeat our condemnation of the policy of granting subsidies of public lands to corporations and monopolies, and, having originated the policy of granting homesteads to actual settlers, we declare that the public domain should be kept for our laboring population.

6. That we are in favor of the adoption of a thorough system of civil service reform, and we indorse heartily the action of President GRANT in settling the Commissioners under the recent so-called Civil Service act.

7. That we unite with our fellow-citizens in every portion of the Union in the hope that the enmities and resentments of the war may be speedily ended, and that the day may soon come when in every State every citizen may be safe in life, person, property and civil rights, and may have the equal protection of the laws, so that no man who was loyal to the Union during the great struggle may for that reason be the victim of persecution, outrage and assassination, so that some encouragement may be offered for the removal, in all proper cases, of political disabilities imposed for participation in the rebellion.

8. We recommend the calling of a Convention to amend the Constitution of the State.

9. We express our unqualified approval of the administration of our present State Executive, Gov. R. B. HAYES, and assure him that our verdict is, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

The nomination of Gen. EDWARD F. NOYES for Governor followed. The Committee appointed to wait upon him and inform him of his nomination, returned with him, and he was introduced to the Convention by Mr. DENNISON. He was received with a tremendous outburst of enthusiasm, and when the cheering had subsided, spoke as follows:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: Permit me to express my sense of obligation and my gratitude for the great honor you have done me today. Circumstances which it is not necessary to discuss, but entirely dissociated from any peculiar fitness of my own, have made me the standard-bearer of the Republican Party in the approaching campaign, rather than some one of the distinguished men who have been named in that connection—all more experienced in public affairs, better known to the people, and abler to conduct the canvass. With much diffidence I accept the post assigned me, relying upon the assistance of the tried and true leaders of the party, who have heretofore conducted it to so many victories; upon the intelligence and patriotism of the great mass of our citizens, and above all, upon the justice of our cause. This is no time or place for lengthy discussion of party issues, but I may be permitted to say that we are not called upon to desert a political organization with such a record as ours for the last ten years; a party which fought to successful issue a four years' bloody war, and then, honestly and without complaint, assumed the heavy burdens which the war entailed, rather than tarnish the public honor or weaken the national credit; a party which has given freedom to 4,000,000 of slaves, as well as citizenship and suffrage to a whole race by constitutional provision—valid in fact and binding in law, destined to stand unrepealed forever; which has readjusted the disturbed relation of the States, and reconstructed the Government as it was before the war; which has reduced the national debt at the rate of more than $100,000,000 a year, and taxation in proportion; which has adopted a policy with the Indians on the frontier so wise and humane as to render a standing army unnecessary; which, by the honorable settlement of the Alabama question, has removed the last of our difficulties with foreign nations, and inaugurated a new epoch in the settlement of international disputes, by arbitration, which, by honesty, economy and practical good sense, has put us in the lead of nations in prosperity, and wealth, and happiness. Shall we desert such an organization as this, and pin our faith upon the sleeve of the so-called Democracy, who in this city, three weeks ago, found it necessary, in order to escape the sickening record of its past history, to come to a dead halt and about-face, and to make a long march to the rear? For one, I stand by our record, and have no apologies to make. In the coming campaign, the order to our legions closed in mass, will be: "Forward, guide centre, march," and, instead of going backward, we shall go on to certain victory, over a divided, a discomfited and disheartened enemy. Once more allow me to thank you for all your kindness to me.

At the close of the speech of the next Governor, the Cincinnati Gazette says, the whole Convention rose to its feet and greeted the one-legged hero with such cheers as have seldom been heard, even in Columbus, that city of political conventions.

THE RECORD OF CRIME.

A Family Fight and Small Riot in Forty-first-street—Probably Fatal Injury of one of the Participants.

An affray attended with singular circumstances, and which will probably have a fatal result, occurred Saturday night, at No. 441 West Forty-first-street. BERNARD LEAVEY, who kept a small grocery and liquor saloon at that number, quarreled with his wife, ANN, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when she struck him with some instrument, the nature of which has not yet been ascertained, inflicting a severe cut on the side of his head. CHARLES MCGINNIS, who lives next door, going in shortly afterward, and finding LEAVEY bleeding profusely, began to wash his wound. He had scarcely begun when Mrs. LEAVEY entered the room with a large coffee-cup in her hand, and was about to strike her husband again, when MCGINNIS caught her arm. She turned fiercely upon him, threatening to strike him if he did not leave, and, not caring to be further entangled in the affair, he left the room, but not until he had seen her smash the cup over her husband's head as he was going out the door. LEAVEY then lay down on the lounge, and remained there until about 11 o'clock. The quarrel between him and his wife was then renewed, but they were separated by Wm. QUINN, of No. 536 Tenth-avenue. By this time a large crowd had gathered in the street in front of the house, and CHRISTOPHER FARRELL, a nephew of Mrs. LEAVEY, who lives in the house, seized a large knife from a meat-stand and rushed out upon them. LEAVEY also went out, armed with a shovel, shouting that if any of them wanted to fight, he was ready for them. The crowd immediately began to throw bricks at FARRELL and LEAVEY, and the latter was soon knocked senseless to the sidewalk, and the crowd immediately dispersed. It does not appear that the Police arrived at the scene until this time, when there was nothing to be done but take LEAVEY, who was still unconscious, to the Twentieth Precinct Station-house, and from thence, as soon as possible, to Bellevue Hospital, where it was found that his skull was fractured, and his recovery extremely improbable, although the physicians said it would be impossible to give any positive opinion in the case for a day or two. Yesterday morning, Mrs. LEAVEY was arrested and locked up as one of the assailants, and FARRELL was detained at the Station-house as a witness. From information that he obtained, Capt. CAFFRY was convinced that JAMES MOORE, of No. 568 West Forty-first-street, had been engaged in the affray, and he being arrested, yesterday afternoon, was identified by FARRELL as one of those who threw bricks, and he was therefore locked up. One of the witnesses declares that two pistol-shots were fired during the mêlée, but it was not known who fired them, nor that any one was injured by them. It appears also that one JAMES FARRELL, of whom Capt. CAFFRY is in search as one of the assailants of LEAVEY, was cut and slightly wounded by CHRISTOPHER FARRELL, when he first made his foray from the house, brandishing the huge knife he had snatched from the meat-block.

A Mistake and its Penalty.

PAUL GERMON, a feather manufacturer, lives and conducts his business at No. 97 Greene-street, with the misfortune of having a disorderly house on each side of him. In consequence of this fact, he is nightly annoyed by the attempted intrusion of persons seeking the adjacent disreputable places. Last night at 10 o'clock EDWARD F. BRANDT, a sailor living at Long Branch, mounted the stoop of Mr. GERMON, and notwithstanding that gentleman met him at the door, assuring him that he was mistaken in the house, BRANDT, who was under the influence of liquor, endeavored to push his way into the house. A struggle ensued, which ended in BRANDT'S being precipitated to the sidewalk. He was at first supposed to be seriously injured, but upon being examined by Dr. FRAZIER at the Eighth Precinct Station-house, whither he was taken, he was found to have no more serious hurts than some severe bruises upon his

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

For the week ending Saturday, June 24, real estate matters have been exceedingly quiet, but few private sales having been effected, while the public sales at the Exchange have, with one exception, been worthy of but little notice. The sale referred to is that of Wednesday last, when A. J. BLEECKER, SON & Co. sold the Worth-street property, opposite the store of H. B. CLAFLIN & Co., embracing four lots of ground, with large five-story buildings thereon for $282,000 in the aggregate. The price was a low one, and the property should have brought a larger figure. The total sales of City property, including the above, for the week ending Saturday, June 24, reach the sum of $274,065, as against $54,220 for the week previous, ending Saturday, 17, the other sales, respectively, being made by MULLER, WILKINS & Co., B. P. FAIRCHILD and JAMES MCGUIRE.

In suburban sales more activity has been displayed, and the auctions held during the week have met with good success. On Monday, June 19, JOHNSON & MILLER conducted a sale at Vanderbilt Landing, at which some ninety lots were sold at fair prices, the total amount realized being over $20,000. On Tuesday and Wednesday, June 20 and 21, A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & BRO., O. H. PEARSON, auctioneer, engineered a sale at Oakland, N. J., on the line of the Central Railway, the result of which was in the highest degree successful, nearly 700 lots being sold at an average of $100 per lot. The same firm also conducted a sale at Chatham, N. J., on Friday, June 23, at which a considerable property was disposed of at a fair figure. At the Exchange, on Wednesday, June 21, B. P. FAIRCHILD sold a hotel property, located at Fishkill, Dutchess County, for $5,000, and on Thursday, June 22, JAMES J. FLEURY sold, at Jamaica, Long Island, forty-four lots at an average of $100 apiece. The total value of suburban property sold during the week will amount to about $125,000.

In Brooklyn, on Wednesday, June 21, J. COLE sold at the Commercial Exchange real estate situate in that city to the value of $40,000, and on the day previous, June 20, to the amount of $36,000, all of it under Court orders, either in foreclosure or partition. As, however, all these transactions have been reported from day to day in detail, a further mention is unnecessary.

BUSINESS OF THIS WEEK.

During the present week, for the season of the year, the market promises to be an active one, for not only are the suburban sales to take place of importance, involving the disposition of large tracts of valuable property, but at the Exchange, a number of quite noticeable auctions, legal and otherwise, are to be held, at which City real estate well worthy the attention of investors will be sold. The following is a list of the proposed transactions for the week, the sales to come off each day being noted on which the realty described will be offered by the auctioneers named:

Today, Monday, June 26.

OLIN, Esq., referee, the premises known as No. 130 Canal-street, south side, between Christie-street and the Bowery, embracing a lot 23 by 75, upon which a four-story brick building is erected, in size 23 by 40.

CORBET, Esq., referee, a house and lot on the north side of Twenty-fifth-street, 350 feet east of First-avenue; lot 25 by 98.9. Also at two other Supreme Court sales, both under the direction of D. P. The lots to be sold are only eleven miles from New-York, via the Hackensack Railway, and two miles from the village of Hackensack. They all lie within a few moments' walk of the station. Special train from Chambers-street at 11 o'clock.

Tuesday, June 27.

By JAMES M. MILLER, at the Exchange, by order of the Supreme Court, in partition, under the direction of D. P. HOPPER, deceased, by order of the executors of which estate the auction takes place. The lots are handsomely located on an elevated plateau, overlooking the City of Paterson, and for building sites, soon to come in demand, are deemed valuable. The transaction is one of the most important of the week. Special train at 11½ A. M., (per ferry,) from foot of Chambers and Canal streets.

By J. COLE, at the Commercial Exchange, No. 389 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, real estate in that city, located as follows: Two four-story brick houses and lots, Nos. 46 and 48 Amity-street; on the rear of the last noted lot is also a two-story and basement frame house. The above property is sold in partition to settle an estate. Also, at public auction, four-story brick house and lot, No. 353 Union-street; three-story brick house and lot, No. 295 Smith-street, and a vacant lot on Henry-street, between Cranberry and Middagh streets.

Wednesday, June 28.

By E. H. LUDLOW & Co., at the Exchange, by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure, under the direction of ALFRED T. ACKERT, Esq., referee, the property known as No. 295 Water-street, east side, between Dover and Roosevelt streets, including a lot 23.6 by about 73, with a first-class five-story brick warehouse covering the same.

By A. D. MELLICK, JR., & BRO., at Passaic, N. J., on the ground, at 12½ P. M., 100 choice building lots, located in an attractive portion of the village, and in close proximity to the railway station. Also a dwelling-house, with one acre of land. The neighborhood is unexceptionable, and the property is surrounded on every side by handsome improvements. The lots are sold by order of the executors of THEO. B. MARSH, deceased, late Treasurer of the United States Express Company. Special train for the sale, at 11 A. M., for which free passes can be obtained of the auctioneers, No. 6 Pine-street.

By JOHNSON & MILLER, at West Hoboken, N. J., on the premises, at 2 P. M., thirty-six valuable lots, located respectively on Montgomery, De Mott and Hoboken streets, and near the Paterson and New-York Plank road. The lots are each 25 by 100, and being so near the Metropolis, for building purposes, are certain to increase in value yearly. The terms of the sale are liberal.

Thursday, June 29.

By E. H. LUDLOW & Co., at the Exchange, by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure, under the direction of A. T. ACKERT, Esq., referee, a four-story brick house and lot, on the north side of Thirty-third-street, 162.6 feet east of Madison-avenue; lot, 18.9 by 100. Sale adjourned from Tuesday of last week.

By JAMES M. MILLER, at the Exchange, at two Supreme Court sales, in foreclosure, under the direction of D. P. INGRAHAM, Jr., Esq., referee, a house and lot on the west side of Suffolk-street, 50 feet south of Stanton-street, and a house and lot on the north side of Madison-street, 150 feet east of Scammel-street. The first-named lot is in size 25 by 75, and the last 25 by 100. Also, at another Supreme Court sale, under the direction of THOS. MONAGHEN, Esq., referee, the premises No. 807 Sixth-street, comprising a lot 25 by 90.10, upon which a four-story frame building is erected on the front thereof, and a four-story brick in the rear.

By JOSEPH MCGUIRE, at the Exchange, by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure, under the direction of LEWIS O. CORBET, Esq., referee, property on Sullivan-street, between Broome and Spring streets.

By B. DINGEE & Co., at Alturas, Rockland County, on the ground, at 1 P. M., a large number of desirable lots, sold in numbers and in size to suit purchasers. The enterprise, under the auspices of which this sale is to take place, is more strictly a benevolent than a business one, as the greater portion of the proceeds arising from the disposition of the lots is to be donated for charitable purposes. Space forbids a more extended notice of this proposed auction at this time, but reference will be again made to it later in the week. The sale to take place is the first of a series, and should this one meet with that success which it deserves, and the merit of the property entitles it to, others will follow in quick succession.

By E. A. LAWRENCE, at Flushing, Long Island, on the ground, at 12 o'clock, by order of the Supreme Court in partition, under the direction of GEORGE I. MURPHY, Esq., referee, 143 acres of land belonging to the Bowne estate, divided into thirty-three plots of from one to five acres each in extent. Special train from Hunter's Point at 10½ A. M., via ferry from James-slip and Thirty-fourth-street at 10 o'clock. Maps of property to be obtained of WILLETTS & Co., No. 303 Pearl-street.

Friday, June 30.

By A. J. BLEECKER, SON & Co., at the Exchange, by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure, under the direction of PHILIP S. CROOKE, Esq., referee, four very valuable Central Park lots, situate on the north-west corner of Eighth-avenue and Ninety-seventh-street, together forming a plot 100.11 by 100.

By MULLER, WILKINS & Co., at the Exchange, by order of the executors of PETER O'CONNOR, deceased, the leasehold premises No. 75 Robinson-street, north side, between Washington and West streets, lot 23.9 by 77.10 by 21.6, with four-story building thereon, lease for seventeen years from May 1; ground rent, $500 per annum.

The above list includes all the proposed sales of the week thus far brought to our notice. Should any others be projected they will receive due attention.

The sale at Chatham, N. J., held on Friday, June 23, A. D. MELLICK, JR., & CO., auctioneers, was quite largely attended, and the result as satisfactory as could have been expected. A detailed report of the transactions will be found below, in which the lots sold and the prices realized are noted in detail.

A Reply to the Catholics—A Traveler's Views—The Baccalaureate Sermon at Princeton College—The Infant Grand Duke.

REPLY TO THE CATHOLICS.

The Spiritual Unity of the Protestant Church—Sermon by Rev. T. N. Haskell, of Illinois.

Rev. T. N. HASKELL, of Illinois, preached yesterday morning, at Rev. Dr. ROBINSON'S Church, from the seventeenth chapter of John, twentieth and twenty-first verses: "Neither pray I for these alone; but for them also which shall believe on Me through their word; that they may all be one as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us." Mr. HASKELL said that the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Pontificate, of Pope PIUS IX., celebrated last Sunday, gave occasion for many bold aspersions of the Protestant Christians. A high priest in the Cathedral pulpit repeated on that day in sounding words the old allegation that the Roman Catholic is the only true Church; that in it alone is to be found true Christian unity; that Christ left to it as a mark that it was his Church the unity which is the grand characteristic mark of the Catholic faith, as it was claimed was shown by this grand celebration of the Papal anniversary extending over the whole world, celebrated on the same day and hour and by the same words and ceremonial in all parts of the world at once. The Church of the Protestants on the other hand, broken up into fifty different sects, without harmony among themselves, each one believing a different thing from all the rest, shows that the spirit of God dwelleth not among them, that their religion is a sham, &c. There are many customs in the Papal Church which are not universal; for instance, celibacy of the clergy, which is not practiced by the Eastern, nor by some other branches of the Catholic Church. But in essential points even, there is more moral unity in the Evangelical churches of Protestant Christianity than is possible in any of the branches of the Papacy, and I believe that Jesus desires and designs that there shall be a greater unity in our church than even now exists. The struggles of sectarianism, for which we are reproached, do seem, at first thought, like the work of Satan, but really they are tending to do good. It has stirred up a warmth of controversy which has prompted stern and industrious investigation into the truth in the passing age, bringing much to light thereby which, but for detecting feeling, would have remained hidden. The antagonisms which have been generated are merging meantime into a general belief in the noble fundamental principles which all have found at the bottom. Absolute organic unity is not possible nor desirable in our Church. It is spiritual unity that the Savior refers to in the text, and not mere external, ecclesiastical, nor Papistical unity. True, the Savior demands a certain visible unity, which shall bind believers together and impress the outside world of unbelievers. But this does not imply unity in the form of worship or of unessential doctrine. The boast that throughout the whole world the subjects of the Pope chanted last Sunday in his praise the same hymns, in the same language, to the same music, is to the self arrogant, superficial, and devoid of the real spirit of Christianity. In so far as this form and symbol worship takes the place of true and humble self-abasement before God, it is of antichrist. True religion, of necessity, breeds slight differences in worshipers. All lovers of the Bible have each different favorite chapters suited to their different circumstances and different mental constitutions. From different standpoints the same thing appears in minor points differently. But this identity is never lost. The standpoints of Christians affect their views of religion. But the religion in their mind is still the same. There are some essential points which all Christians will see exactly alike, and these are vastly superior to the points on which opinion differs slightly. The great doctrines necessary to salvation are held by all. The attributes of God, the evil nature of sin, the infinite nature of Him who atoned for sin, God's sovereignty and man's accountability, all hold as alike true. Those who differ most in technicalities are one in belief in these great bases of the faith. The High Churchman on his broken staff of the apostolic succession and the lowest of low churchmen slouch off when they come together into the kingdom. In aid of the suffering of conquered France the contributions of all churches flowed naturally through one channel. The young men of all the churches in their good work over the land now form one Christian association irrespective of sect. The tendency to unity is growing, and nothing can or will arrest it. An overwhelming ecclesiasticism has in some cases arisen from sectarianism, but it is but a temporary evil. When a sect claim that they are the only church, that their hymn book is the only one, and their liturgy the universal law of Christians, they illustrate an evil of the sectarianism they cry out against. The genius of Protestant Christianity is to protest against the overshadowing of the individual growth and belief by the wealth and pomp of a church organism. But though independent, we are not disunited. The Methodist in Burmah, the Baptist in India, the Presbyterian in other parts of the world, teach the word in different ways, it may be, but the word is the same and the spirit is the same.

A TRAVELER'S VIEWS.

The Chinese on the Pacific Coast—Mormonism—Discourse by Rev. W. H. Boole.

Rev. W. H. BOOLE, pastor of the M. E. Church, Fiftieth-street, between First and Second avenues, who has just returned from a mission to the Pacific coast and Salt Lake City, discoursed before his congregation, yesterday, on the result of his mission. At the morning service he took for his subject, "Religion and the Chinese on the Pacific Coast." He spoke nearly as follows: It is difficult to get a clear view of the state of facts existing on the Pacific coast. The Methodist Church in California numbers only 4,500, while statistics show that 40,000 went from eastern countries to the Pacific slope. Where are they gone to? Twenty thousand may be set down as having died. What became of the rest? I don't wish to be understood as saying that there are no Christians in California; but the Christian power there has dwindled very low. We found nothing prepared there—scarcely a handful in the place to forward the work of God. The Christians were timid in the presence of the stalwart giants of wickedness. We supposed that we should find hundreds of converts, but we learned that revival meetings had never taken place. Instead of having hundreds to assist us, we found no more than forty or fifty to take any active part in the mission. There was no difficulty in getting a congregation, many of whom were gamblers and murderers. The whole city is filled with backsliders from the Eastern States, and the standard of piety was never very elevated on that slope. A convert, who had given up rum-selling to become a Christian, soon found that Christians in the Church, and when he complained to the minister about it, the answer he received was, "What can we do? If we turn them out, they'll go to the devil—our standard here is not what you hold in the East." We began preaching with fear and trembling, and day after day passed, but apparently there was no work of God in our midst, and the war of opposing forces was getting stronger and stronger. Mock meetings were held in the rum-shops, and our efforts for the conversion of sinners ridiculed. Still we persevered, and there soon came one of those sudden interpositions of divine power, a sudden descent of the spirit of God on the congregation. One man, an opium-eater, who had eaten 120 grains of opium a day for eighteen years, and who could get no medical man to rid him of the passion for opium, prayed so fervently to the Lord, that in three weeks he was a man among men, an acknowledged Christian among the elect of God. After this, many of the backsliders came up and were converted. The result of the meetings at Sacramento exceeded my hopes, and before we left there were flaming revivals along the coast. We next went to Santa Clara Valley, which is twenty miles wide, but by reason of the clearness of the atmosphere does not appear to be more than four miles. There was a Roman mission planted here over 100 years ago, and a railway train now runs through the beautiful road once held sacred by the monks. The Catholics have large edifices here, but their power is dead, and if all entered into a revival movement there, no opposition need be apprehended. Occasional performances are given in the theatres by the students and monks, which is all the care they give for the souls of men. We found great apathy among the people, and inquiring into the cause thereof, there came to our ears fearful revelations. We found that church members rented houses for infamous purposes, and that selling on Sundays was tolerated. We went to work and preached, and from the body of the congregation a man rose with heart-rending and piercing shrieks and prayed to God for the conversion of that sinful community. In three days from that period there were at least 1,500 who prostrated themselves before the altar, seeking the mercy of God. We next went to San Francisco and had no difficulty in getting a congregation there, but on the second evening the rowdies broke up the meeting. Special constables were sworn in and no repetition of the tumult took place. We found great opposition there and many bad Christians. In all San Francisco there could not be found twenty men and women of the higher Christian standard. One thing they declared was, "that the Sabbath had not yet been imported from the East." Ministers declared that San Francisco would not stand the Gospel in its pure form, but at last the Lord came and the Holy Ghost fell upon the assembly, and church members and ministers and people from the outside world, fell under its power.

THE CHINESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

This nation and Christian Church have a problem in their midst to be solved. What is to be done with the Chinese politically is a great question, but what their relations to the Church is to be is a more important question. We have in this country idolaters, making sacrifices and bending themselves before their gods. What is to be done with them? They come from different districts and speak different dialects. Missionaries who had learned only one dialect of the Chinese find, on their arrival in San Francisco, that they can only speak a word or two which can be understood. What is the use of sending missionaries there when they cannot speak the language? What is the Christian Church to do with this great mass of society? It is a loss of money to send out missions which must end in failure. The remedy is to teach the English language to the Chinese, who are intent on learning it, as there is money in it. Conversion will soon follow, and then by sending converts among their fellows to preach salvation, good results may be looked for. God may have sent the Chinese to this country to be converted, and go back to their own country to preach Christianity in it.

At the evening service the Reverend gentleman's subject was "Religion and Mormonism in Utah." Many, he said, were inclined to believe that all the Eastern conception of things in Utah were false or nearly false, and they imagined that Mormonism would die out of itself, but he believed that it would never die out without the assistance of God. If he were asked to sum up in a single sentence his opinion of Mormonism, he would say it was the most dreadful blasphemy in the face of Heaven, and the most horrible insult to Christian civilization that ever came out of hell. Nowhere on the face of the world was there a darker blot than Mormonism was on the United States. He had no words to express his abhorrence of the damnable doctrines of Mormonism. When the devil hatched it he took some time over it, as it was the most systematic and unsystematic development of unchristianity that the world ever saw. He, the speaker, with his party, six in all, had recently access to the houses of the Mormons; he conversed freely with them, and listened to their preachers. He was informed that BRIGHAM YOUNG, in his Tabernacle, eighteen months ago, threatened the United States Government, in case they should send any officials to inquire into his practices. The Gentiles should, he said, be carried what course they pursue with regard to his institutions. He, the speaker, on his arrival in Utah, determined to ignore Mormonism and to preach the truth. The mistake made by preachers was that they endeavored to show that polygamy was not indorsed by the Old Bible, but merely permitted. If Mormonism was attacked in this point, the gun was not very heavy. Mormons believe that the Old and New Testaments are combined, that BRIGHAM YOUNG is God's vicegerent on earth, and, as he is their High Priest, that his revelations are divine. The Mormons attended their meetings, and he conversed with many of them after leaving the Tabernacle. He found that they believed all they had heard, that Mormonism included it all, but that it went further. More than one-half of the Mormons were not apostates from the Christian faith. If they had been backsliders or apostates the Gospel would have had some power with them. A vile set of men does not, he said, exist, than BRIGHAM YOUNG, his twelve apostles, elders and dignitaries. They were guilty of the most damnable crimes that ever were committed, crimes that he dared not mention to them, but which made the heart sick. BRIGHAM YOUNG and four or five of his apostles were present one evening when he preached. He denounced their whole system of religion, which was near causing a great row, as the Mormons present got quite excited, but there were 500 miners and Gentiles ready armed besides the guns of the United States, two and a half miles distant, which could be turned on the city. The reverend gentleman denounced those who call on BRIGHAM YOUNG when they go to Utah. He would be ashamed to take the hand of a whole-sale libertine, and he would not introduce such a man to his daughters. The day after the row he believed that BRIGHAM YOUNG felt ashamed of the proceedings. He (BRIGHAM YOUNG) was asked what he thought of the speaker's attack on Mormonism, and he replied: "It was the driest well and the most masterly pumping I ever heard."

He believed it was the intention of BRIGHAM YOUNG to go away from Utah and take all his property with him, and the belief was gaining ground that the Temple would never be finished. In conclusion, he said there rested a great responsibility on the Government of the United States for permitting Mormonism to exist within its territories. If the Government does nothing toward obliterating this iniquity, God will hold it responsible. He did not want that the Government should stamp it out at once, but to take steps for its gradual decay. BRIGHAM YOUNG was, he said, a determined enemy of the United States Government, and would endeavor to overthrow it if he thought he could succeed. He hoped the Government would never again appoint a Mormon to any official position.

PRINCETON COLLEGE.

The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Commencement of the College of New-Jersey—Dr. McCosh's Baccalaureate.

The exercises of Commencement week at Princeton were, yesterday, inaugurated by the annual Baccalaureate Sermon of President McCOSH, before the members of the graduating class. The address (for it was rather an address than a sermon) was delivered before the students in the College Chapel, taking the place of the regular Sabbath exercises. Dr. McCOSH took for his subject the text: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord," and spoke at length as follows: While Jehovah is one, and must be one, He is represented from the beginning as having a diversity in his nature—in the Old Testament as Elooluim, in the New Testament as Father, Son and Holy Ghost. God never dwelt in loneliness, but ever in the atmosphere, in the light and heat of love, and was thus ever in a position to exercise His highest attribute. Again: the moral, the noblest embodiment and expression of the Divine nature is also one. Summed up like the Divine character in love, but having a diversity of applications to the agent himself, to the created and the Creator—that one law requiring us to love soberly, righteously and Godly. The profoundest investigations of philosophers and artists have shown that beauty, so far as its delicate form can be caught by the subtlety of the human intellect, embraces in it unity with variety. The unity where it is found, being beautiful in proportion to the variety, and the variety where it exists, in proportion to the unity. I am in this discourse to show that in the works of God, that in the word of God taken separately, and in the works and in the word of God viewed in continuation, there is sameness with difference after the model of divine nature, and in correspondence with the good and the lovely. In other words in the true as well as in the good and beautiful as in God himself there is oneness with diversity, constituting a universal harmony.

I. There is unity with variety in the works of God. We see this in the matter of the universe. That matter is one and the same in all time and in all space. So far back as history goes, as geology goes, we discover the same elements in the world as we do now in fire and water, in sea and air and land, in rivers and mountains. Chemistry tells us that provisionally these elements are in number over sixty, and now we know that some of them are to be found in all the heavenly bodies. Of late years the spectroscope, which promises to reveal more wonders than the telescope or microscope has done, shows that the same bodies which we have upon the earth are found in the sun and in the distant stars. The rays of light are so affected as to show that they have come through sodium or hydrogen, or some other of the substances found on our globe. But, in what a diversity of modes do the bodies appear: in earth, water, air, and fire, as the ancient Greeks classified them; in rarified, in elastic, in fluid, and in solid forms; in floating ether, in compact metal, in crystalline order; in gems and stars; in plants, satellites, and suns; the trunks of trees, branches, foliage, flowers, and fruits of plants; in the bones and muscles, the brain, the senses, and in the goodly house in which we dwell, so fearfully and wonderfully made.

We see it in the forces of the universe. It is the grand discovery of the science of our day that the sum of force, actual and potential in the universe, is always the same and one. The will of man cannot add to it, no human effort can diminish it. If you consume it in one form it appears in another. A large portion of it, coming from the sun, is taken up by the plant which is eaten by the animal, and becomes in us the power which we feel in our frame as we breathe and walk and run and labor. We may use it to serve our purposes of good, or, alas! of evil; but we can use it only by means of itself; we can evoke it in one form only by means of the same force in another form. And after we have used, it becomes the same it was before. After running, it may be, the round of the universe, it may come back in the spot and in the form in which we first noticed it. Just as the vapors which the sun's heat exhales from the sea, rise into the atmosphere and descend in rain on the earth to form rills, rivers which flow back into the ocean; so the forces which operate in the earth, the air and the sea, in plant and in animal, after running their circuits ever fall back into that great ocean of power, which is just one manifestation of the divine power. But in what a diversity of modes does this force appear; in matter attracting other matter and holding atoms and worlds together, in elements combining, according to their friendships and strifes, as EMPEDOCLES of old expressed it, or according to their affinities, as chemists say; driving our steam engines; heating our homes, quivering in the magnetic needle, riding in the storms of the earth and in the flames of the sun's atmosphere, blowing in the breeze, smiling in the sunshine, striking in the lightning and living in every organ of our body. Like the ocean, ever changing and never changing, ever the same and never at rest, moving in every particle, every planet and every star, imparting increasing activity and securing an undisturbed stability.

We see it in the orderly arrangement of the powers and forces of the universe. The matter of the universe might have been what it is, and the forces of the universe might have been what they are, and the result have been only confusion, and not order, spreading suffering and terror instead of happiness and confidence. It is clear that he who created the material and the forces of the world has also imparted to them such a disposition that they may fall into order, and each has its appropriate place, each with its special work to accomplish. The result is, first, beneficent laws, such as the revolution of the seasons, of the times of the budding and bearing seed by the plants, and both the youth and maturity of animals. These do not arise from the mere rude matter of the world, nor from its blind forces, but from an arrangement made to accomplish an end, the prevalence of order in the form of law, which is to be regarded as an expression of the will of God, and a means of enabling intelligent beings to gather knowledge. Without such a system of general laws, man, as at present constituted, could not obtain that wide range of experience, could not foretell coming events, could not evade the threatening evils, or lay hold of the promised good. It is by the establishment of uniformity that the future is made to resemble the past, and we are enabled so far to anticipate the future and lay our plans accordingly. But along with the uniformity there is a certain amount of irregularity, for general laws there is an adaptation of things, of things so as to constitute general laws, and an adaptation of laws one to another, so as to bring about individual events. Thus by a series of very complete arrangements of matter and of forces we have a series of joints in the animal frame, and the joints varying according to their juncture; thus there is a ball and socket joint turning all around at the shoulder where it is a convenience, but not at the fingers where it would be a weakness and an incumbrance. This it is that constitutes Providence. The sunshine and rains are made to nurture our food, while the plants and lower animals supply us with raiment. God can thus accomplish not only His general design, but His particular purposes; can rescue the good man from peril, and relieve the wants of the poor at the opportune moment. So delicately hung is the whole system, that it moves sympathetically with our position, our wants and all our feelings. It is so ordered that the very hairs of our head are all numbered, and that a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without the knowledge of Him. We see it in our mental talents and tastes. The mind of man is suited to the position in which it is placed in the world. There is an order in the world, and man is so constituted as to discover and appreciate it. There is reason in the works of God, and reason in man's mind to observe it. The spiral conformation of the nebular groups, the elliptic orbits of the planets, the hyperbolic curves of the meteors, the form of the shells and molluscs, are all constructed according to mathematical laws, which have their seat in the intelligence, and which can be evolved by pure thought. When we arise to the higher forms of life, when we come to man and woman, we may not find the rigid straight lines, and the invariable curves are not observable, but it is because while they are still there, they have given to them an infinite sweep and variety. There is a poetry here at which physics and metaphysics meet and become one. There is a beauty in God's works, and man has a taste for it. Man loves unity and variety, and nature supplies these in every department, in stormy sky, in romantic glen, in cultivated field, in river, forest and in flower. And above even beauty, as much higher as the sky is above the earth, we have a sublime order in the massive rock, the rolling ocean, thunder and the star-spangled expanse of heaven, all suited to that idea of the infinite which the mind is ever strong to lay hold on and yet can never grasp. Man has faculties of a high order, and he has the means of gratifying, of cultivating, and of refining them in the study of the works of God, in the fine arts, in music and painting, in statuary, in architecture, and specially in history, poetry and prose, in which the highest forms of wisdom and the most exquisite forms of beauty meet and blend and harmonize, as in philosophy, in history, in social science, in prose fiction, in poetry, lyric, didactic, tragic, comic and epic. All these are thrown open to us that we may make acquaintance and converse with them, that we may drink of their spirit, and be molded after their example. Here we have a fund of wealth which can never be exhausted, something suited to all, something adapted to each—to every talent, to every taste, to every intended pursuit in life. It is clear that the intellect and the sensibilities of our nature are suited in every way to our position, and that the same God made the world within the world, and compassed their exquisite adaptations to each to the other.

II. There is unity with diversity in the Word of God. That Word was written at very different times, and by writers of very different characters, tastes, temperaments and talents. Some of the authors write in a clear and simple, others in a bold and sublime style. Some of the books have upon them the hoar of antiquity, and introduce us to the fabulous days of the race and the beginnings of human history. Others are evidently composed when thought is matured and culture has reached a high perfection. One writer instructs by biography, another unfolds the working of God in history, a third inculcates pure precept, a fourth expounds doctrine systematically. One takes up his parable, another pours forth his song, a third utters a warning, a fourth cheers the dark days of the people of God with the prospect of better days. The greatest of all touches the tenderest chords and reaches the depths of the heart by simple statement, by vivid illustration, by truth which recommends itself instinctively, by heavenly precept and tender sentiment "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers of the prophets, hath in these days spoken unto us by His Son." In the midst of all this diversity, there is a unity from beginning to end. There is one stream rising in the pure fountain of Eden, becoming defiled in the terrible fall into the abyss of sin, often troubled, interrupted, and having to burst through chasms, now widening, now narrowing, but flowing on toward the ocean of eternity. The events occur after a model, the men are after a type who is first seen in the dim distance, and then appears in the fullness of time. It is one progressive march of prophecy, culminating ever and anon in a fulfillment. It is one creed in regard to God and Christ and man, with regard to this world and the world to come, and underlying the whole history, the songs, the dispensations, and the precepts. This unity arises mainly from the circumstance that there is one God, inspiring the writers and bringing them all to a consistency. Even as the Lord of our God is one, so is the word which he has inspired also one. This is the grand central sun which binds, which illumisates all the parts, securing a continuity in the history, and a congruity in the doctrine and practical injunctions.

III. There is a harmony between the works and the Word of God. The analogy in the third division very closely resembles that in the other two. The harmony is shown both in unity as to purpose and in diversity as to means and detail. The existence of this harmony is apparent at the first glance, and continues uninterrupted in its truth and beauty throughout all the works and Word of God.

Dr. McCOSH dwelt only for a short time on this division of his discourse, concluding his address in a twenty minutes' discourse upon its application to the members of the graduating class who sat before him. He spoke of the need of harmonizing their lives with truth as laid down in Nature and the Bible. Right methods are essential; without the use of a correct method no success could come, and the material with which their minds had been stored by long study could not, without it was made subservient to law, be ever of advantage. A little knowledge rightly used was better than great learning wrongly used. The greatest injury comes to the world through the pursuits of learning controlled by wrong moral ideas.

Today and to-morrow will be occupied by the Class Day exercises, the gymnastic exhibitions, the Junior Prize oratorical contest, and the annual oration before the Societies. The oration this year is to be delivered by Secretary of War BELKNAP, the American Whig Society having in the choice, which rested with them this year, followed the example of the Chosophic Society, who, last year, chose Secretary ROBESON. Secretary BELKNAP is a member of the former Society, having graduated in 1847, and Secretary ROBESON is a member of the latter, having graduated in 1846. President GRANT has signified his intention of being present at the oration to-morrow afternoon.

The commencement exercises take place on Wednesday, the graduating class numbering seventy-eight gentlemen. The President, Gov. RANDOLPH, Secretary BELKNAP, Gen. FRANK BLAIR, and other distinguished individuals will be present.

THE INFANT GRAND DUKE.

Religious Services in His Honor Aboard the Vsadnick—An Elegant Collation—Speech of the Russian Minister—Anecdote of the Oneida Disaster.

The services of the Greek Church, which were announced to take place yesterday on board of the Russian corvette Vsadnick, now lying off the Battery, though not attended by as large a concourse of distinguished personages as had been expected, were nevertheless witnessed by a brilliant assemblage of ladies and gentlemen. The Russian Minister, M. CATACAZY, and the members of the Legation and Consular Corps were present in full uniform, besides several officers from the Brooklyn Navy-yard and Russian and French ladies and gentlemen, residents of this City. The altar was erected under a large awning, spread across the gundeck amidships, and shone brilliantly with its rich and massive altar service, gold and silver embroidery, and its gayly-colored surroundings of banners and ensigns, festooned in every conceivable form.

The ceremonies were commenced at 11 o'clock, and were conducted by the Chaplain to the Russian Embassy, Rev. Father BJERRING, assisted by Rev. Mr. SMYRNA. The services consisted of the usual Greek liturgy, the prayer of thanksgiving for the happy birth of the infant Grand Duke GEORGE ALEXANDROWITCH, who, as before stated, is the son of the heir apparent to the Russian Crown, the Grand Duke ALEXANDER, and the Te Deum Laudamus. The services were quite lengthy, occupying fully two hours, and at their conclusion the devoutness and reverence manifested by the seamen, who were ranged, in their white uniforms, on the port side of the gun-deck, was quite marked as they advanced to kiss the cross and receive the holy communion. A noteworthy incident during the service was the omission of the prayer for the President of the United States, which always at the celebration of the liturgy of the Greek Church on American soil follows the prayer for the Emperor and Imperial family. The omission was made by the Greek priest doubtless because he imagined it inappropriate on the deck of a Russian war vessel, but was at once detected by the Russian Minister, who interrupted the priest and very courteously requested the prayer for the Chief Magistrate of the great Republic to be added in the service that followed. The omission was supplied at once. M. CATACAZY'S position of chief of the Embassy gave him the right to command what he had only requested. After the conclusion of the rites the Russian Minister stepped forward and kissed the golden cross and afterward the hand of the priest, at the same time receiving from the attendant priest the consecrated bread, which he bestowed with a blessing upon the oldest seamen aboard. This is considered by the Russians as a mark of great favor.

Immediately after the chanting of the Te Deum Laudamus, and the dispersing of the assemblage, a sumptuous collation was spread in the wardroom, to which those present at the mass were invited. His Excellency, M. CATACAZY, presided. After the cloth had been removed, the Russian Minister arose and made a brief and appropriate speech, in which he mentioned the scandalous attempts to engender ill-feeling between the Governments of Russia and the United States, by efforts to involve Mr. Secretary FISH and himself in a personal disagreement. M. CATACAZY distinctly stated that the official relations which existed between himself and the United States Secretary of State had always been most friendly, and as to his private intercourse the friendship of the two families was intimate and cordial. He thought the attacks of the newspapers upon him unkind, dishonorable and ungenerous, because his position sealed his mouth. As the representative of His Imperial Majesty, he could not reply to their shameful abuse. In concluding his remarks the courtly Minister proposed "the health and long-continued prosperity of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia, and His Excellency the President of the United States, paradoxical as it may appear, the heads of the two great democratic Governments of the globe."

The toast was replied to by Dr. PITKIN, of the United States Navy, who had been an intimate friend of the officers of the Vsadnick while in Yokohama. Surgeon PITKIN related an incident in regard to the ill-fated Oneida that has never before appeared in print. He said that a few days after the running down of the Oneida by the English steamer Bombay, by which the lives of 115 United State officers and men were lost, a grand ball was given by the Foreign Club in Yokohama to Lady PARKS, the wife of the English Ambassador. The American and Russian officers who were members of the Club attempted to prevent the festivities as shameful disrespect to the memory of the dead, but were overruled. The ball came off in the elegant rooms of the Club-house, but the Russian and American officers, to a man, refused to accept the invitations sent them, as did also the wife of the English Consul-General, who was an American lady. Surgeon PITKIN concluded by offering, "Our Russian Guests."

In the evening several of the officers, including Capt. MIKHAYLOFF, dined at the residence of the Russian Minister on Staten Island. Ice due to Capt. MIKHAYLOFF to state that the Vsadnick is a marvel of cleanliness from truck to keelson, a circumstance to which is doubtless to be attributed the astonishing good health which has been preserved among the ship's company during the entire cruise of over three years, she having lost only three men by death. The Vsadnick coals today, and will probably sail to-morrow or next day for Plymouth and Russia. Her two invalid officers, Lieuts. DESAINDEV and KOLTCHAK, were present at the services, yesterday, accompanied by United States naval surgeons, who pronounce them unfit to withstand the rigors of a long sea voyage. They will remain at the United States Naval Hospital until convalescent.

A Military Excursion.

The Veteran Association of the Third Company, Seventh Regiment, will, by invitation of the Hoboken Yacht Club, visit the Club grounds at Tottenville, Staten Island, to-morrow, on its first annual excursion. The steam-boat Rattler will leave the foot of Whitehall-street promptly at 9 A. M., to convey the excursionists to the island. The arrangements, as perfected, will render the occasion a very enjoyable one. Should the weather be unfavorable, the trip will be postponed to the succeeding day, Wednesday. It is expected that the past and active members of the Company will be largely represented, and that this reunion of the "Old Third" will be one the recollection of which will brighten many a future hour. Capt. JAMES PRICE is the President of the Association, which is in excellent trim and prosperity.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

The once handsome Park in the rear of the Croton Reservoir, on Sixth-avenue, was not the sort of thing to please the taste of the Park Commissioners, and the growing trees were at once uprooted, and the Park, of only a few years' origin, thrown into its present state of desolation. Mounds of dug-up earth, heaps of stable-manure, and the monitor-like tar furnaces encumber the grounds. Why do the Park Commissioners choose the Summer months for work that might be done as well in the Fall and Winter? Have the Fall elections anything to do with it?

The fifth anniversary of the Cornell M. E. Mission, on Sixteenth-street, near Avenue C, was celebrated yesterday afternoon. Among the speakers of the occasion were Rev. J. Y. WOLFF, Mr. MORRISON, and Revs. ROSS and HOLLIS. The singing was led by Mr. CHARLES HERRING, with Master H. R. LA RUE at the organ. The Superintendent, Mr. T. LA RUE, is a zealous workman, whose endeavors in the Sunday-school have always been successful.

The community of sparrows in Washington Parade-ground mourn the scarcity of water in the Park pending the alterations. Not being provided by nature with arms and sufficient strength to pump up water from the hydrants, they are obliged to depend for their supply upon the small puddles around the water apparatuses named, which are soon dried up by the sunshine. It is to be hoped that their grievance will secure the attention of the Clerk of Complaints of the Water Department.

The cry of "Hot Corn!" is now heard at nightfall, and awakens the echoes of our streets and sleeping citizens at midnight. A little girl, a vender of the article, sat sleeping the other evening on the sidewalk. A policeman touched her with his club, and, thus suddenly aroused, she immediately cried out, "Hot Corn!" Poor little waif, she was mistaken; the corn was as cold as her own cheerless life. The night air had extracted its warmth.

The vegetable gardens on the upper part of the island, generally rented and cultivated by Germans, are looking at present something like the descriptions of the small Dutch farms we read about. Many of them are situated in the hollow lots just this side of the Central Park—to be at a time not far distant the site of lofty buildings. Early vegetables, in these market gardens, are now as far advanced as those that come to us from the South.

The squatters on the black rocks uptown obey the scriptural injunction, and lay the foundations of their homes upon a rock; but though high above the force of floods and streams, the tide of improvement sweeps them before it. This shanty population of New-York is similar to those poor whites of the South, who, in the days of princely slaveholders, occupied their lands until driven off or asked to leave the premises.

One of the soda-water establishments down town has a satirical picture in its window, in which a number of well-known men are portrayed dressed in Oriental costume. In the group may be recognized Gen. Grant, Horace Greeley, Mayor Hall, Tweed, Fisk, Dowling and Kelso, and a host of others. They are all engaged drinking soda-water and other beverages from a huge fountain. The portraits are excellent.

It is said that the "improvements" in the very little Park in West Broadway cost $75,000. These triangular patches are all expensive affairs. At each of them one Park policeman is stationed, and at some of them two, who, for a good round salary, keep intruders from climbing over a high iron railing, the gates being generally locked. Are the parks multiplied for the policemen or vice versa?

It is alleged that A. A. ROBINSON, the chief book-keeper in the wholesale grocery establishment of HENRY WELSH, corner of Washington and Franklin streets, is a defaulter to a large amount, said to be over $6,000. That was the extent of a deficiency alleged to have been discovered in his cash account. He disappeared mysteriously and detectives are earnestly looking for him.

If some of the officials of the Board of Health would visit the large tenement in a back court in Closby-street, between Broome and Prince, the pestiferous odors that would assail their olfactories, would convince them that some action should be taken by them in the premises. Unfortunate creatures are those doomed to live in a foulness equal to that of the Augean stables.

The day and Sunday schools of the Five Points Mission made their annual excursion to Pleasant Valley on Friday last. It was a decided success. All were more than satisfied with the pleasures of the day, and the occasion will long be remembered by the little ones and those who accompanied them.

The warm weather creates an irrepressible desire in the minds of many persons to sit or stand with their heads out of the window. Yesterday afternoon, in one block on Houston-street, 197 of these protruding heads were counted. Those who ride in the cars and put their heads out run the risk of having other heads put on them.

The New-York Down-town Chess Club, established about a year ago, held an annual meeting and election of officers at the Chess-rooms of the Café Europe, in Division-street, on Saturday night. Mr. P. VON FRANKENBURG was elected President, Mr. HUBERT Vice-President, and Mr. DOYLE Secretary.

"As the twig is bent the tree's inclined." There is a large tree in Twenty-fourth-street, near Sixth-avenue, which, from its crooked growth, must have had but little care in youth. And yet, notwithstanding it crookedness, it is a delightful ornament to the street over which it stands like an arch.

JOHN M. FLETCHER, the colored man who stabbed WM. FOX, at No. 33 Sullivan-street, Saturday night, was arrested yesterday morning by Officer MCCARTHY of the Twenty-eighth Precinct, and being arraigned before Justice Cox, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, was committed.

A meeting of the North German Landwehr Verein was held at Concordia Hall, No. 30 Avenue A, yesterday afternoon. The Association resolved to turn out on Wednesday morning, at 8 o'clock, in full uniform, and to proceed to Jones' Wood, to take part in the Saengerfest.

HENRY FULTON, of No. 752 Sixth-avenue, yesterday, jumping from the front platform of a Tenth-avenue car, at the corner of Tenth and West streets, and falling under the wheels, was run over and seriously injured. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

The ferry-boats which cross the North River, have posted up in the saloons the following: "No gentleman will occupy a seat and allow a lady to stand." Might not a similar placard be appropriately posted in the street cars?

The annual excursion of the Sunday-school and congregation of the New-York Port Society's Mariners' Church, to Myers' Grove, will occur to-morrow. The steam-boat and barge will leave the foot of Catherine-street at 8 A. M.

Rev. E. M. SHULTZ, Missionary of the Five Points House of Industry, will speak at the hall, No. 69 Ludlow-street, near Grand, next Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. Subject—"Missionary Experience at the Five Points."

The subscriptions for a fund to establish a new German theatre have reached the sum of $60,000. The subscriptions for this fund are making slow but sure progress, and there is no doubt that the undertaking will succeed.

The Commissioners of Public Parks have, at their office in Broadway, several very elaborate specimens of gas-lamp, which have lately been sent in to them, and which are to be placed for trial on the public parks.

Unclean lamps are the rule on the cross-streets in the neighborhood of the Central Park. The lamp-lighters paid to clean them have their lights hidden under a bushel of dirt. Let them shine before the public.

The storm on Saturday evening has thoroughly washed the streets and avenues. Even West and South streets, which are generally flooded with mud, presented quite a respectable appearance yesterday.

An unknown man, about thirty-five years of age, five feet eight inches in height, and fully dressed, was found drowned, yesterday, in the East River. The body is at the Morgue.

The names given to trucks by their drivers are often curious. One was seen yesterday, driven by a young man following the same business as his father, entitled the "Old Man's Son."

The receipts at the German General Consulate for the German Relief Fund during the past week amounted to $1,705 67, making, with the previous amounts, a total of $351,712 65.

The most expensively-clothed man in this City is a colored individual, if we except the preying Colonel who purchased the livery of the gallant Ninth to swell himself in.

The fur dealers have commenced to get ready for the Winter season, and there is a demand for sewers, as may be seen from the number of placards in the windows of Broadway stores.

The lower side of Division-street, near the Bowery, is known as Milliners' Row, and one block nearest the Bowery contains fifty-five millinery-stores.

Since the increase in the price of coal there has been a great demand for coke, which is much cheaper than the former, and sells at $4 per chaldron.

The body of an unknown man, about thirty-five years old, was found in the water near Pier No. 34 East River yesterday. It was taken to the Morgue.

Last evening the body of JAMES BRICKLEY, who was drowned on the 22d inst. at the foot of Seventy-ninth-street, North River, was found at the foot of Seventieth-street.

JAMES MCGOVERN, of No. 185 Lewis-street, Saturday evening fell from a car of the Forty-second-street line in East Houston-street, and had his leg broken.

FRANCIS MCKENNA last evening ran his arm through a glass door at his residence, No. 57 Ludlow-street, and severed the arteries. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

JOHN KENNEDY last evening fell off the outer wall of the Battery, and striking his head on the rocks below, was seriously injured. He was taken to Park Hospital.

The officers of the Russian corvette Vsadnik are to meet the officers of the Brooklyn Navy-yard at a farewell dinner today at the New-York Hotel.

Of late years model-making has become a necessary branch of industry, and a considerable number of men are engaged in it in this City.

The public baths, which were open till noon yesterday, were crowded.

The new globe lamps recently introduced cost the City $10 each.

BROOKLYN.

A great number of people, who were doubtless unaware of the fact that the Irving bust was not unveiled on Saturday, assembled yesterday at Prospect Park to see it, and seemed thoroughly disappointed. The bust was entirely covered up, so that no idea could be formed by those who had not seen it at the private view what it was like. Various suggestions were thrown out, and had it not been for the presence of an active keeper the ceremony of a public unvailing would have doubtless been rendered unnecessary.

That the ways of justice are often past finding out by ordinary people, was illustrated by the action of Justice DELMAR, Saturday, in the case of a poor laboring man, charged with cutting down trees without a permit. The poor man, it appears, had been employed by a property-owner to do the work, and had just completed it when he was arrested by a Sergeant of Police on the ground that he had no permit. He was taken into Court and fined $10—more money than he could make in a week cutting down trees. His employer escaped punishment.

Rev. Dr. OLMSTEAD, of this city, preached a very eloquent sermon, last evening, at the Church of the Pilgrims. Rev. Dr. TAYLOR, of Liverpool, England, who has so ably filled the pulpit during the absence of Dr. STORRS in Europe, will preach his farewell sermon next Sunday evening, after which the church will be closed until cool weather. Dr. TAYLOR will make a tour through the Canadas.

At midnight, Saturday, a clerk in the grocery-store of HENRY BULGE, North Seventh and Fifth streets, Williamsburg, informed the police of the Fifth Precinct that at an early hour on the morning of that day four young burglars entered the store, and, finding him alone, threw him on the floor, partially strangled him, and then stole from the till about $12. The clerk shows evidence of rough treatment, but it took him a long time to tell the story to the Police.

The congregation of St. Ann's M. E. Church, Rev. Mr. GLEASON, pastor, will hold a picnic at Leff
